Biographical / Historical

George Miller Beard, 1839-1883, was a distinguished physician and specialist in the treatment of mental and nervous disorders. He was born in Montville, Connecticut, the son of the Reverend Spencer F. Beard, a Congregational clergyman, and Lucy A. Leonard. He entered Yale College in 1858, graduated in Arts in 1862, and spent a year in the Yale Medical Department before studying at the College of Physicians and Surgeons in New York. Qualifying in 1866, Beard immediately joined Dr. A. D. Rockwell in practice in New York, and began to specialize in the study of nervous diseases.

With A. D. Rockwell, Beard published many works on the use of electricity in medical treatment. These studies resulted in the isolation of a complaint, nervous exhaustion or neurasthenia, to which, as Beard explained in his book, American Nervousness (1881), Americans seemed particularly susceptible. Beard also attributed hay-fever, sea sickness, and certain sexual problems to nervous disorders.

Beard championed the rights of the insane and was instrumental in the formation of the "National Association for the Protection of the Insane and Prevention of Insanity." He worked to reform the law so that the insane could not be found guilty of crime, and was famous for vigorously defending this opinion in the case of Charles J. Guiteau, the assassin of President Garfield.

Interested in spiritualism, Beard carried out many experiments in order to prove his theory that mind reading, trances and other manifestations of spiritualism had physiological explanations. His demonstrations at medical association conferences seem to have excited considerable controversy.

Beard died at the age of 44, but during his short life he was a prolific writer and an active campaigner for medical and social causes. His works range from those with a popular appeal, such as Our Home Physician, to scholarly treatises, like the Medical Use of Electricity. Beard's attention to original and frequently unusual research opened up a field of medicine which had been generally neglected until that time. His works were written with vigor and sometimes with unpleasant bluntness, but he was praised after his death in 1883 by a colleague, William Crookes, as "one of that rare class of thinkers who dare to utter their thoughts, and who discuss matters to which the world is glad to close its eyes."

Biographical material may be found in SERIES I, folder 20; and SERIES III, folder 2.

Scope and Contents

The George Miller Beard Papers provide limited but valuable information on the life and work of Beard from 1865 to 1883. Though incomplete, they do provide a sampling of his work on nervous diseases, electrotherapeutics, insanity, and spiritualism. Newspaper clippings, photographs, and printed biographical articles shed additional light upon Beard's career. There are also legal briefs, testimony, and newsclippings relating to Beard's views on criminal insanity, as well as material on some of the spectacular cases of the day, such as the Guiteau murder trial, the Henry Prouse Cooper case, and the Cadet Whittaker case. Of special interest is an essay by Beard's daughter, Grace A. Beard, on the upbringing of a child in the nineteenth century.

Correspondence forms a small part of the papers and gives little information upon such intriguing subjects as Beard's collaboration with Thomas Edison or his experiments in London on spiritualism. There are, however, a few letters from such notable men as Wendell Phillips, Oliver Wendell Holmes, Rev. Joseph Cooke, Thomas Edison, William Crookes, D. B. St. John Roosa, and Lester Ward. In addition, there are important letters in the correspondence of his daughter, Grace. Orphaned at the age of seven, when both of her parents died within one week of each other, she attempted to satisfy her curiosity about her father's life and works, especially his work in spiritualism, by corresponding with many of his colleagues and contemporaries. The most notable of these are: Simon E. Baldwin, Professor William Henry Brewer, Charles L. Dana, Timothy Dwight, Thomas Edison, and Alfred R. Wallace.

The George Miller Beard Papers were donated to Yale University by Mr. and Mrs. George Beard Walker in 1970. Mr. Walker is the grandson of George M. Beard and the son of Grace Alden Beard. The originals of the photo-copies were returned to Mr. and Mrs. Walker after the copies were made.

Arrangement

Arranged in three series: I. Correspondence. II. Writings. III. Subject File.

Collection Contents

Series I: CORRESPONDENCE, 1853-1923

0.5 linear feet (1 box)

CORRESPONDENCE is arranged in three subsections:

"Family Correspondence," 1854-1883, includes letters to Elizabeth Beard (his wife) before their marriage and also during and enforced separation (1880) after their marriage. The letters from his parents give some insight into the religious influences under which Beard grew up. This section is arranged alphabetically either by the name of the person to whom the letter is addressed or by the name of the writer of the letter.

"General Correspondence of George M. Beard," 1871-1883, includes letters Beard received from colleagues, patients, and others interested in his work, including those notable correspondents previously noted.

"Correspondence of Grace A. Beard," 1883-1923, contains correspondence pertaining to Beard, which Grace Beard (his daughter) planned to use in publishing the biography and complete works of her father.

Series II: WRITINGS, 1856-1883

WRITINGS include a diary of Beard's early life (1856-1863), lectures, articles, 18 pamphlets, and a book. The series is arranged alphabetically by category and chronologically within each category.

Although all of Beard's work is not included, there is a good sample of his work on the use of electrotherapeutics in medical treatment, nervous diseases, the insane, and spiritualism. Of special interest are Beard's notes on the lives of 400 famous men for his essay, "The Relation of Age and Work."
