Biographical / Historical

Timothy Dwight (1752-1817) was born on May 14, 1752 in Northampton, Massachusetts. He graduated from Yale College in 1769 (B.A.) and 1772 (M.A.). He served Yale as tutor (1771-1777), Livingston Professor of Divinity (1795-1817), and President (1795-1817). He died on January 11, 1817 in New Haven, Connecticut. He also served as a chaplain during the Revolutionary War.

Dwight was a deeply conservative leader at Yale and beyond. He was a Federalist and a leader of New England's "Standing Order," an elite group of Congregationalist intellectuals, politicians, and religious leaders espousing the value of conservative New England politics, including Federalism, opposition to the separation of church and state, and a focus on political stability. A grandson of the theologian Jonathan Edwards, Dwight was related by blood and marriage to other leading families of Yale and New England; his nephew, Theodore Dwight Woolsey (1801-1889), served as president of Yale, as did his grandson and namesake, Timothy Dwight V (1828-1916). Dwight helped lead the evangelical and religious revivals that swept over Yale in the early decades of the nineteenth century.

Dwight's conservatism intersected with his belief in the socially disruptive potential of an antislavery movement. He expressed opposition to slavery as enacted in the West Indies but supported and participated in the enslavement of Black people in New England and was sympathetic to the practice of slavery in the American South. In March 1788, he bought Naomi, a Black woman previously enslaved by Deacon Daniel Andrews of Norfield (Weston), Connecticut. Although Dwight claimed that she would be allowed to pay for her freedom, Naomi's fate is unknown as of 2024. Dwight enslaved three other people: "a negro Maria b. Oct. 14, 1789; York b. May 31, 1794; next youngest born June 1, 1797" (as recorded in vital records from Fairfield, Connecticut). Historian David Blight, writing with the Yale and Slavery Research Project, has suggested that Maria, York, and the person listed but not named in the vital records were Naomi's children.

Dwight engaged in political and religious activities throughout his life, which are documented in his letters, writings, sermons, and addresses, many of which demonstrate his conservative and authoritarian worldview. He expressed anti-Francophone views, was openly critical of the French Revolution, was a sharp critic of Thomas Jefferson, and was a millennialist. Dwight was a published poet and writer. In 1799, Dwight helped found the Connecticut Academy of Arts and Sciences and served as president of the organization. As president of Yale, he fostered the introduction and teaching of new scientific subjects at the college and supported faculty member Benjamin Silliman in his efforts to build up the sciences at Yale.

Dwight's travel and statistical writings are valuable both for the empirical information they provide about early America and for the worldviews they embody. His four volume Travels in New-England and New-York encompass his observations recorded over a ten-year period. His 1811 Statistical Account of the City of New-Haven, among other topics, includes observations about the city's Black population; for example, he counted the number of free Black people in New Haven as 150 and along with his views of their habits, capacities, and appearance.

In 1809, Edwin W. Dwight, a distant relative of Timothy Dwight and then a Yale College senior, found Henry Obookiah (Opukaha'ia), a young Hawaiian boy, crying on the steps of a Yale building. Obookiah had come to New Haven on a trade ship from China, which had passed through Hawaii on its way to the United States. Edwin brought Obookiah to Timothy Dwight, who tutored Obookiah in Christianity and secular subjects. Obookiah later studied to become a missionary at other New England schools but died of typhus in 1818. Likely influenced by his connection with Obookiah, Timothy Dwight helped establish the American Board of Commissioners for Foreign Missions in 1810. He was also a projector of the Andover Theological Seminary and the Missionary Society of Connecticut. Information in this biographical note was drawn in part from David Blight and the Yale and Slavery Research Project, Yale and Slavery: A History \(Yale University Press, 2024\).

Scope and Contents

The Dwight Family Papers consist of correspondence, financial records, writings, and other material documenting the life and work of Yale College president Timothy Dwight (1752-1817), his ancestors, descendants, and other relations. Relatives in the Edwards, Hooker, Strong, Woodbridge, and Woolsey families are represented. The largest quantity of correspondence documents the family life of John Williams Dwight (President Dwight's grandson), his wife Sophia Dwight Dwight, and children Mary Clarissa, Edward Strong, and Emily Cecilia Dwight. The papers also include courtship letters of Mary Alsop Dwight Patrick and professional papers of President Dwight and his grandson, President Timothy Dwight (1828-1916). Series I: Correspondence and Papers, 1713-1937 includes letters, financial and legal papers, and memorabilia arranged in chronological order, while Series II: Family Papers, 1788-1929 consists of other types of material arranged by individual.

Series I begins with legal and financial documents of the Dwight family in eighteenth century Northampton, Massachusetts, including deeds, accounts, and probate records (folder 1). Folder 1 also contains a March 1788 bond for Dwight's purchase of Naomi, a Black woman who was previously enslaved by Deacon Daniel Andrews of Norfield (Weston), Connecticut; that bond was signed before Maurice W. Dwight and A. Burr. There is also a 1748 account of W. B. Dwight's death and letters for Timothy Dwight (1694-1771) to the Rev. Dr. Thomas Foxcroft describing religious activities in the Northampton area. A 1795 letter invites Timothy Dwight to assume the presidency of Yale College, and several letters in folders 1-3 concern Yale matters. Other letters in these folders focus on family affairs and include exchanges between parents and children and husband and wife.

Folder 3 includes medical advice to Timothy Dwight (1816 Dec. 7) on treating a stricture of the urethra and a copy of the original minutes recorded by Benjamin Silliman at Dwight's bedside on January 10, 1817, the day before his death. These minutes concern directions for the publication of Dwight's writings. Folder 3 also contains remarks by Dwight on the "comparative value" of his sermons and correspondence of his son Timothy Dwight (1778-1844) concerning the posthumous publication of his father's "System of Divinity." The folder also includes correspondence of Benjamin Dwight, Sereno Dwight, Mary Woolsey Dwight, and Theodore Dwight.

The majority of the correspondence in folders 4 and 5 relates to the courtship of Mary Alsop Dwight by Matthew A. Patrick, a career army officer serving in 1832 in South Carolina. His letters include comments on the nullification crisis, which delayed his wedding furlough. A few letters from Mary Alsop (Dwight) Patrick to her father Theodore Dwight describe her life as an officer's wife. Folder 5 also contains correspondence of Theodore Dwight, Jr., concerning the publication of his textbooks, and of Timothy Dwight's (1752-1817) heirs, concerning their claim for a Revolutionary War veteran's pension.

Correspondence between John W. Dwight and his future wife Sophia Dwight of Clinton, New York, begins in folder 5. There are numerous letters to "Sophy" in folders 6 and 7, and folders 8-12 are almost exclusively concerned with this branch of the Dwight family. For a period of a year and a half (1862-1863) John Dwight lived in New Haven, working at a saltpeter business, while his wife and family lived in Clinton, near her family. The almost daily letters between husband and wife concern family finances, weather, the eating habits and behavior of the children (Mary, "Minnie" or "Molly"; Edward, "Ned"; and Emily, "Cecily"), the death of son Louis, John's draft status, and the deteriorating nature of Sophia's health. Following Sophia's death in 1863 there are far fewer letters, but the correspondence through folder 25 is predominantly that of Mary and Edward with their father, now the president of the New Haven Fertilizer Company, uncle Benjamin W. Dwight, and other relations and school friends. Edward graduated from the Yale Medical School in 1886, and several letters concern attempts to establish his medical practice. From folder 17 on there are occasional letters from Timothy Dwight (1828-1916) to non-family members. The majority of these letters are dated after 1888 and concern Yale University business.

Folders 24 and 25 contain additional undated letters of John W. Dwight's family, while folders 26-29 include memorabilia, writings, and financial and legal papers of this same branch of the Dwight family. Folder 28 includes photographs of the Dwight family ancestral property in Dudley, Massachusetts.

Series II includes papers of Margaret Dwight Bell, Benjamin W. Dwight, Henry Dwight, Timothy Dwight (1752-1817), Susan Edwards Daggett Dwight, and Timothy Dwight (1828-1916). The largest quantity of material relates to Timothy Dwight (1752-1817) and includes sermons and other writings, as well as notes of his sermons and discourses recorded by his son Benjamin W. Dwight, Alexander Phoenix, and an unidentified student in the Yale College seniors' recitation room. Folders 43 and 44 contain Dwight's journals of travels to Cape Cod, Newport, Portsmouth, and Vermont. These were later edited and form a small portion of the published version of Dwight's Travels in New England and New York. (A few additional journals are found in the Humphreys-Marvin-Olmsted Papers, MS 857.) The series includes both printed and manuscript sermons, many of which were delivered at Yale College, and Dwight's poetry.

Benjamin Dwight is represented through biographical writings on his father, some travel observations, and his account of a storm in the Catskills, which he copied and sent to Benjamin Silliman in 1820. Margaret Dwight Bell's papers relate to her 1810 journey from New England to Warren, Ohio. The handwritten copy of her original journal describes the bad roads, inns, and traveling companions she encountered. For Henry Dwight there is a notebook, in German, from studies abroad and a book of hand colored flower engravings. Susan Dwight's papers consist of an autograph album, and for Timothy Dwight (1828-1916) there is a copy of his address at the dedication of Osborn Hall and inscriptions from books presented by him to Battell Chapel. The series concludes with a box containing six pairs of eyeglasses which belonged to Dwight Family relatives.
