Biographical / Historical

Robert Provo Norris was born ca. 1825 at Broome in Norfolk, England, the eldest son of Reverend D.G. (Dennis George) Norris, a Church of England parson who was Vicar of St. Edmund Church, Kessingland, Suffolk for 35 years. Robert was the first of eight children born to Reverend Norris and his wife, Mary Pellew (born ca. 1800 in Halifax, Nova Scotia). Only three of the Norris children would survive childhood and live past the age of twenty-five. An illness seems to have swept the Norris household in 1844, for Mary Pellew and three of her children--Henry (1828-1844), Ellen (1840-1844), and Elizabeth (b/d 1844)--all died in this year. Reverend Norris lived on until 1865. Surviving daughters Mary (1830-1906), Christiana (1831-1895) and Rose Gernton (b. 1833, married 1863) remained in the Suffolk area for the rest of their lives.

On 9 June 1846, Norris joined the 6th Regiment in Kessingland and was stationed there for approximately two months. By 30 July 1846, he had left Kessingland and travelled to Cork, Ireland, where he remained for over one month. In early September 1846, Norris and the rest of his regiment were sent to the Cape of Good Hope. During the Napoleonic Wars, Britain took possession of the Cape of Good Hope, which was previously a Dutch colony. The Cape area was an ideal resting point for European traders en route to India. However, the original Dutch colonists in the area, many of whom were farmers, became engaged in the wars between different aboriginal African tribes, including the Xhosa. Britain became involved in the wars primarily for political reasons and to protect British trade interests. As early as 1795, British troops were sent to the Cape of Good Hope in order to keep the peace. Until 1895, the British were engaged in many frontier wars in South Africa, including but not limited to the Seventh Frontier War or the War of the Axe (1846-1847), the Xhosa/"Kaaffir" Wars (1850-1853 and 1877-1878), and the Anglo-Zulu War (1879).

Although he spent over five years in South Africa, Norris was not involved in all of the Cape’s numerous frontier wars. When sent to South Africa in 1846, he was first stationed at Fort Peddie, a camp situated between the Fish and Keiskamma Rivers, approximately 20 miles from the Indian Ocean. Norris and other members of the 6th Regiment were subsequently sent to Cape Town, thereby avoiding the skirmishes of the War of the Axe from 1846 to 1847. In addition, Norris spent some time at Fort Cox and approximately seven months at Fort White, where, in 1848, he was promoted to Lieutenant in the 6th Regiment.

While in Cape Town, however, Norris prepared for the forthcoming military campaigns and enjoyed weekly socializing with fellow soldiers and other British citizens living on the Cape of Good Hope. He also occupied his time by concentrating on his artwork, making watercolors and drawings of local scenes and people. Norris’ diaries and art reflect his observations of life in South Africa, and his writings trace the development of a friendship and romantic relationship with a young woman named Annie de Smidt. Annie was a member of the well-established de Smidt family, of Dutch origin, who had settled in Cape Town in the early years of the nineteenth century. On May 9, 1850, just before Norris was to be thrown into battle on the eastern frontier, he wrote the following passage regarding his nearly two-year relationship with Annie: “Spent naturally a very pleasant evening, but the more I know the more difficult will it be to leave her. Such is life. We no sooner know and make friends than we are doomed to part” (Diary 1). In June, 1850, Norris’ regiment was moved to the eastern frontier and involved in skirmishes during the early days of the Xhosa (“Kaaffir”) War.

In October 1851, members of the South African Xhosa people, then known to Britons as “Kaffirs,” were gathering in great numbers near the Amatola Mountains and the town of Waterkloof, close to the Kroomie Mountains. Norris’s 6th Regiment, consisting of approximately 611 soldiers and under the command of Lieutenant Colonel John Michell, was ordered to march toward the Kroomie Mountains and attack the stronghold of the Xhosa chief, Maqomo. During the early morning of October 14, 1851, while pursuing the Xhosa into the depths of the Kroomie mountain range, Norris was shot through the abdomen as he led his men into battle near the edge of a deep ravine; he died in his sleep later that same day. His body was taken to a nearby military post and buried by a clergyman of the English Church, Reverend J. Wilson.

There are two memorial tablets erected in memory of Norris, both of which are at St. Edmund Church, Kessingland, Suffolk. The first seems likely to have been installed by his family; it notes that he died at just 25 years of age, while leading his men in battle. The inscription on a second plaque declares it to have been “erected as a mark of esteem by his brother officers.”
Scope and Contents
The collection comprises personal diaries, watercolors, and drawings by Robert Provo Norris, most of which were created while he was a soldier stationed on the Cape of Good Hope in South Africa during the Frontier (“Kaffir”) Wars of the 1840s and 1850s. It also includes letters written by other correspondents and miscellaneous manuscripts about his life and death. The bulk of the collection represents the years 1846-1851.

Arrangement
The collection is arranged into four series: I. Diaries; II. Correspondence and Writings; III. Sketchbook; IV. Watercolors and Drawings.
Holograph diary, including personal accounts of Norris’ daily activities and observation of life in South Africa.

Several pages at various intervals appear to have been torn out of the diary. It is not clear whether they contained any portion of text.

The fly-leaf features a pen and ink drawing of a barking dog, along with Norris’s name and regiment. It is dated August 22, 1846. “Cork Barracks” is listed as the location. Four graphite sketches, including one labeled “Cape Town” and another labeled, “Fort Albert from Camp,” preface the diary portion, which begins in September, 1847. It tapers off in October, 1847 and then picks up January 1848. Norris resolves to write “more regularly than” before.

Norris records daily life at Fort Peddie, including “[p]arade in fatigue dress,” and receiving orders for various companies to ready themselves to proceed to “undetermined places.” Norris also notes envying other companies sent to King William’s Town, which he regards as “the best post on the Frontier,” although he does acknowledge that such a designation is “not saying much...” He helps to drive cattle (a resource much fought over during the Frontier Wars), writes of a horse race held between various officers, and records official treks to King William’s Town and back. Norris writes of interactions with some locals, such as the buying of a pipe from a “friendly Kaﬀir,” but tense relationships also are in evidence: “Brought a Kaﬀir boy...with a rope round his neck intending to take him a prisoner...but let him go as he returned the knife he had stolen.” Life at camp appears fairly comfortable for an officer like Norris, although the South African frontier presents many hazards (sunburn and dangerous waters on the “Line Drift,” a path on which Norris and others drive cattle frequently).

Norris writes of attending a court martial trial for theft in which the accused was found guilty and given “50 lashes & 6 months...hard labour.” Norris’s presence at other court martials is noted, including one for drunkenness. He also notes appearing in court to “give evidence on White- trial for the murder of Serg’t Jelly.”

Once he is transferred to Cape Town, Norris records frequent drills and parades, as well as an active social life. He seems interested, to a certain degree, in his surroundings and in South African culture. He sketches landscapes occasionally and at one point visits an acquaintance, “who shewed me some Bushman’s poisoned arrows with a quiver and bow; a great curiosity being very hard to get them; the arrows are about 1 1/2 feet in length made of reed with about an inch of bone in which is beautifully set a small iron barb which has the poison on it; they are certain death. The Caffirs dread the sight of a bushman particularly when they utter their boar cry [?] on an ostrich feather. The poison which they get from some root is only known to themselves.” Norris is so well integrated into the colonial culture, however, that he does not comment frequently on such matters. He longs for mail from home, recording letters, newspapers, and copies of “Punch” sent to him by his family. He writes to loved ones in England frequently and notes, in 1848, having his “portrait taken in daguerreotype” to send home.

Norris occupies some of his free time with reading, noting that Sheridan’s “School for Scandal” is one of his favorite works. He also reads the work of Alexandre Dumas and Horatio Smith. Norris’s journal records many dances and other assemblies at which the British and Dutch citizens of Cape Town are present.
In particular, Norris grows close to a young woman named Annie de Smidt and remarks upon the occasions when he can dance with her or escort her home. Norris calls frequently on the de Smidt family. Annie was the fourth of six children of Johannes de Smidt, Esq., the Assistant Commissary General. Annie’s cousin, Abraham de Smidt, Jr., became a well-known surveyor for the Colonial government and a keen landscape watercolorist.

At the close of the journal, in May of 1850, Norris is ready to ship out on the “Hermes,” and reflects on having to leave Cape Town. He seems to want to draw his relationship with Annie to a close, although he records giving her a brooch and confessing his feelings of love to her, shortly before his departure.

Diary
160 pages (with many blanks) ; 13 cm
Norris, Robert Provo, d. 1851

Holograph diary, including an alphabetical roll of British squads, personal entries and notes about Norris' debts and expenditures, some graphite sketches, and one pen and ink sketch.

The diary’s fly-leaf has pen and ink drawing of a barking dog and the inscription “R.P. Norris.” It contains various types of entries, the first being an alphabetical roll of “No. 2 Squad of ‘B’ or Captain E. Staunton’s Company, 22nd Sept. 1847.” Soldiers’ vital statistics (age, height, marital status, etc.) are recorded here.

There are several pages of journal entries (in graphite and pen-and-ink), most of which record increasingly dangerous conditions near Fort White. Norris writes of multiple skirmishes involving heavy gunfire which incurred serious losses. He writes of seeing men dead on the battlefield and of the wounding of his friend “Cathy,” a fellow soldier mentioned frequently in his other diary. Details of the native tribespeople’s intimidating presence are found here--Norris at one points notes that “heat and fatigue compelled...[some] to drop coats and blankets which the enemy picked up and displayed to us, yelling most frightfully.”

After a particularly serious skirmish, Norris writes, “what was our horror on seeing 15 of our countrymen lying dead partially stripped, 7 with them about 4 kaffirs & 2 wagon drivers. It was indeed a painful sight and to be obliged to leave the bodies unburied.” Gunfire is never far away from the men at Fort White, and it is almost constantly within earshot, according to Norris’s entries. The situation seems very grim as the diary entries cease, suggesting that Norris continued to face dangerous encounters with the opposing forces on a regular basis.

A few graphite sketches show landscapes and some small studies of various figures. At the back of the volume are pages of accounts paid and received, some of which consist of notes penned by other soldiers, stating that they have received money from Norris (presumably to pay back a debt).

1 sketchbook (82 leaves); 11 x 21 cm

Norris, Robert Provo, d. 1851

Inscribed: “R.P. Norris.” A piece of paper has been pasted onto the inside cover, with a note in ink reading, “Robert Provo Norris/Killed in Action 1851/ (Kaffir War).” Many of the sketches are dated 1848, which suggests that most of the content dates to this year.

Multiple sketches appear within the volume, including watercolor landscapes and graphite portraits. Norris depicts “Simon’s Town, from the North Battery” in a particularly striking graphite landscape. He sketches a map (in graphite) labeled, “Post at Line Drift,” a route (the Line Drift) which he traveled frequently while stationed at Camp Peddie. Norris’s sketches are carefully observed, showing military forts and the surrounding natural settings in clear and vivid detail. Included are graphite portraits of Xhosa/“Kaffir” men and women, as well as a fine graphite portrait of a “Zolah Warrior” with shield and spear held aloft and a tall feathered headpiece. There are some more melancholy sketches of local African people in Western clothes, drinking liquor and looking destitute or debauched.

Both military and domestic architecture are shown in Norris’s sketches, including parts of Cape Town, British forts, and a “Vicarage.” He also features “Barnard Castle” in one highly finished drawing. Norris also tries his hand at comic sketches, perhaps imitating some of the content in his beloved “Punch” magazine, which was sent to him from his family at home in England.

A brief set of diary entries in graphite are recorded at the end of the volume, along with a newspaper clipping about the marriage of Captain P.W.P. Wallis, the brother-in-law of Robert Provo Norris’s father, Rev. D.G. Norris, to Jemima Mary Gwyne.

“Attack on Fort White, 3 January 1851.”
1 watercolor; 15 x 25 cm
Norris, Robert Provo, d. 1851

Watercolor sketch showing an encampment of Xhosa/“Kaffir” warriors in foreground, with the British Fort White seen in the middle-distance in a grassy valley floor. The warriors, who appear to be naked, hold rifles and are clustered in small groups here and there on a flat dusty area. There are no British troops seen in this image, done presumably sometime after the attack. Labeled in graphite on reverse. Unsigned.

“Kaffirs” portrait of man, two women, and infant.
1 watercolor; 26.5 x 18.5 cm
Norris, Robert Provo, d. 1851

Watercolor portrait of three Xhosa/“Kaffir” tribespeople. A man stands holding a long wooden implement, keeping his hands and body wrapped in a beige colored cloak. A woman with a beaded or colorful band around her breast, beige skirt, and golden bangles stands holding a small wooden or woven bowl. Another woman kneels in the foreground holding a bushel of reeds. She has an infant strapped to her back. It is not known whether the three subjects posed for this portrait or were observed from a distance by Norris. Labeled in graphite. Unsigned.

His body is largely uncovered, while the gathered men are mostly wrapped up in beige capes. They look attentively at him as he speaks, pointing his finger towards some object in the distance at right. They are gathered in a dusty stretch of lowland. Colors are labeled on reverse in pen and ink and graphite title reads, “Fancy [?] sketch of Kaffirs.” Unsigned/undated.</td>

<td>Watercolor depicts assembly of Xhosa/”Kaffir” people outside the Fort Cox buildings. Inside, presumably, is Sir Harry Smith, the colonial governor, who held a meeting with Xhosa leaders in late December, 1850. The watercolor is loose in style, with people depicted as vertical dashes of brown paint with darker brown dots for heads. The sketch is labeled in graphite. This meeting was to be the last of its kind before war again broke out within days.</td>

Watercolors: people (continued)

b. 1, f. 5c(6)
“Cape Corps,” portrait of an African man in military garb.
1 watercolor ; 21.5 x 17.5 cm
Norris, Robert Provo, d. 1851

Watercolor portrait, full-length, of an African man with a moustache wearing a British or European military costume. He has a billed cap (with initials “C.M.R.” for “Cape Mounted Rifles” embroidered or stamped on it) and a tight, high-collared, jacket, both in dark blue, and beige trousers. He also wears black leather boots. He stands with arms crossed, looking sideways at the viewer. A metal sword is slung at his waist. In graphite are sketched mounted military men, at considerable distance in the background. The image is labeled in graphite.

Mounted officer riding a galloping horse.
1 graphite sketch ; 18.5 x 22.5 cm
Norris, Robert Provo, d. 1851

A detailed graphite drawing of an officer in full uniform (including cape, tall hat, and sash) astride a horse who runs or leaps with wide eyes and outstretched feet. The officer looks back over his shoulder and his sword is held out in his right hand. His heavy saddle and other equipment are shown clearly. Unlabeled.

Jockey on horseback with dog.
1 graphite sketch ; 16.5 x 20.5 cm
Norris, Robert Provo, d. 1851

Graphite sketch of a jockey or rider in a lightweight cap and riding clothes astride a horse who leaps or gallops forward. A dog is shown running alongside the horse, although the dog has been sketched over with shading/cross-hatching. The image is initialed “RN.” It likely represents a scene from one of the many horse races that Norris seemed fond of attending while in the Cape Town area.

b. 1, f. 5d(3) African (Xhosa?) woman carrying baskets on her head.
1 graphite sketch; 18.5 x 14 cm
Norris, Robert Provo, d. 1851
An African woman is seen from behind in this apparently incomplete sketch. She bears three baskets on her head and carries a fourth basket in her hand. She wears some kind of band-like top, with a wrapped long skirt. Her feet are bare and she wears bracelets on her wrists. A palm tree is sketched loosely at left. Unlabeled.

b. 1, f. 5d(4) Portrait of a young man.
1 graphite sketch; 18.5 x 13.8 cm
Graphite portrait by an accomplished artist, showing a young man who appears to be in his twenties. The subject has large clear eyes, long sideburns, and no beard. He has a pleasant expression and wears a high-collared jacket, shirt, and cravat. It is unlikely that the subject is Robert Provo Norris, as the drawing is initialed and dated, "ER. 1836," and Robert would have been only ten years old at the time. The portraitist, "ER," is unidentified.

On the reverse is a partial and incomplete graphite portrait of another sitter.

b. 1, f. 5d(5) "Panoramic" view of military buildings and encampment.
1 graphite sketch; 23 x 50 cm
Norris, Robert Provo, d. 1851
The sketch is unsigned and unidentified, although it has "Road" written faintly to indicate a narrow road running in the foreground. An unusual building with two stories and a hinged sort of structure atop it is seen here. A sentry stands on guard near a small post. Another building is visible at left and there are trees and a small tent. The image carries over past the folded edge and onto the reverse. A military encampment is sketched faintly on the last two portions.

View of a lowland or valley floor with hills in distance/ “Fort White.”
2 graphite sketches, one on either side of sheet; 17.5 x 25.5 cm
Norris, Robert Provo, d. 1851
Graphite sketch of a British fort in a low-lying grassy area. Hills can be seen in distance. Labeled, “Fort White.”
On the reverse is a graphite sketch of a grassy lowland with hills in distance. It appears to depict a location similar to that shown on the opposite side of the sheet, so it is likely of the area surrounding Fort White.

Tents inside a fort/Incomplete sketch of tents.
2 graphite sketches, one on either side of sheet; 17.5 x 25.5 cm
Norris, Robert Provo, d. 1851
Graphite sketch of tents set up on the inside yard of a stone fort. There are seventeen tents, all assembled at close quarters to one another. Presumably, these were officers’ tents, much like the one Robert Provo Norris occupied (according to his diary). This is a detailed depiction. Unlabeled.
On the reverse is a view at slightly closer range of the same tents. Though incomplete, this image shows one tent’s structure and rigging in some greater detail. Unlabeled.

Coastline with mountains and ships in water.
1 graphite sketch; 16.5 x 24 cm
Norris, Robert Provo, d. 1851
Graphite sketch, somewhat incomplete, of tall brushy mountains, whose tops are obscured by clouds, towering over a coastal settlement. A few ships can be seen in the water. Unlabeled.

Sketch of an officer in uniform.

1 pen and ink sketch, with a partial (torn off) watercolor on the reverse; 17.5 x 12.5 cm
Norris, Robert Provo, d. 1851

Pen and ink sketch of an officer wearing a feathered and visored helmet and full uniform. He stands with his sword pointed at the ground. A loose profile is sketched above this image.

On the reverse is part of a watercolor landscape, torn in half. Graphite scribblings and writing covers this watercolor, with some handwriting practiced and the name “Carles Henry de Rouvignes” written at the bottom of the page. It is unclear why this name appears here, although similar scribblings appear over another of the pieces in this collection.

Rocky coastline scene / unfinished shoreline village.

2 watercolor and graphite sketches, 1 on reverse side of the other; 25 x 36 cm
Norris, Robert Provo, d. 1851

Watercolor sketch showing a rocky coastline with large mountains stretching up from water at left, a small building on the shore towards the foreground at left, and a curving dirt road or path in the immediate foreground. Unsigned/unidentified.

On the reverse: an incomplete watercolor and graphite sketch of a shoreline village. Natural features are painted with a light wash of color and buildings and other features remain only outlined in graphite.

Unfinished tree with rocky shore in the distance.

1 watercolor; 25 x 36 cm

“Near [?] Zanderend,” river and mountains / “River Loudes [East London?]” graphite sketch.

Century, Robert Provo, d. 1851

1 watercolor with a graphite sketch (incomplete) on reverse; 17.5 x 25 cm

Watercolor scene of a calm river with spiky green plants growing at banks in foreground and at left. On the left shoreline are bulbous rocks and trees. Lowlands extend to the right, and large mountains rise in the distance. The watercolor is signed, “Near [?] Zanderend,” suggesting it was done near the Zander End mountain range/river.

On the reverse is a loose graphite sketch of a five-pillared bridge. It is labeled “River Loudes [?] End,” but possibly indicates the area of East London, a South African port city.

Zander End scene /graphite sketch of coastal buildings.

Norris, Robert Provo, d. 1851

1 watercolor, with graphite sketch on reverse; 17.5 x 25.5 cm

Watercolor image of the Zander End river/mountains. A similar image to another in Norris’s watercolors. This version appears to be slightly more complete, with a more finished look to details. The watercolor is done with careful attention to detail. Unlabeled.

On the reverse is an incomplete graphite sketch of some low tower-like lookoutts on a rocky bit of coastline, along with other stone buildings. The sketch is partially, and other graphite ‘doodles’ suggest that the paper was used to practice drawing shapes (a horse’s head and architectural features are loosely sketched here). Unlabeled.

Village in grassy hills /“Fort Cox,” distant view.

Norris, Robert Provo, d. 1851

2 watercolors, one on either side of sheet; 17.5 x 25.5 cm

Watercolor scene of grassy hills dotted with brush and trees. Low stone buildings, presumably part of Fort Cox, are seen on a hilltop in the background. Unlabeled.

On the reverse is an image of two African men sitting in the foreground, one of whom looks towards Fort Cox, which can be seen as a congregation of many buildings and tents grouped on neighboring hilltops. A dirt road connects the various parts of the fort and its outlying buildings. Labeled in graphite.
b. 1, f. 5e(6)

Brushy hills and mountains / Zander End view.
2 watercolors, one on either side of sheet; 17.5 x 25.5 cm
Norris, Robert Provo, d. 1851

Watercolor view of brushy, grassy, hills and purplish mountains in distance. A few buildings appear at the right.

On the reverse is an image of the Zander End river/mountains that feature a few times in Norris's paintings. Neither image is complete. Unsigned/unlabeled.

"amber’s _op, Taben-Dodo, June 51, In front of Fort White” hilltop beyond a dusty lowland.
1 watercolor; 17.5 x 25.5 cm
Norris, Robert Provo, d. 1851

Watercolor sketch of a dusty lowland in foreground with brushy hill rising to a slightly rocky peak in the background. A dirt path appears to wind up towards the peak. The title is not completely legible, but indicates that this image is of a location in the Tabendodo Mountains (a name which seems to have become obsolete).

"Cape Town/Henry de ___[?]”
1 watercolor and 1 watercolor-and-graphite sketch, on either side of sheet; 10 x 15.5 cm
Norris, Robert Provo, d. 1851

Small watercolor sketch of Cape Town, done with fine attention to detail. Scene shows two people standing at some distance from foreground, under a group of cypress trees. They look down through hills on either side to the town at the base, on the shore. Mountains are shown on the distant coast. Labeled in graphite.

On reverse is a rough graphite/sepia wash sketch of an African man wearing a pointed straw sunhat. Written in graphite is the name, “Henry de ___” along with other graphite scribblings, done as though to practice handwriting.
