Collection Contents

Part I: 1529-1907

Part I is 13.5 linear feet and is comprised of both originals and copies of government documents, including letters, decrees, edicts, ordinances, accounts and reports; church documents; correspondence; legal writs; political writings, and literary texts. The materials document the history of Mexico from the pre Columbian period to the beginning of the twentieth century, and illustrate the history of the peoples before the arrival of Spaniards; the Spanish conquest; the colonial civil and judicial administration; the role of the Catholic church in colonial society; the Bourbon reforms; the movement for independence; the First Mexican Empire; and the early republican period.

On the history of the peoples who inhabited the Mexican territory before the arrival of Spaniards, the collection includes originals and copies of works written by authors in the eighteenth and nineteenth centuries. There are texts by the historian Mariano Fernández de Echeverría y Veytia and the travelers Brantz Mayer and Brasseur de Bourbourg. Concerning the Spanish conquest, the collection includes a copy of Crónica de la Nueva España by Francisco Cervantes de Salazar, the most prominent humanist in Mexico during the sixteenth century. Although unfinished, Cervantes's text is a detailed and fascinating account of the military enterprise of Hernán Cortes and his comrades.

The texts concerning the colonial period, numerous and varied, constitute the core of the collection. To study the colonial civil administration during the seventeenth and eighteenth centuries, the reports written by viceroys and local authorities are valuable documents. The numerous legal writs are outstanding sources for understanding judicial administration and the literary culture of lawyers. Legal writs and decrees also provide rich information to analyze the economic, social and political significance of the Catholic church and the Jesuit, Franciscan, Dominican, Mercedarian, and Augustinian orders. The Bourbon reforms undertaken by colonial administration in the Mexican viceroyalty are extensively documented in the numerous royal and viceregal decrees, edicts, and ordinances promulgated mostly in the second half of the eighteenth century.

On the independence movement, there are letters, reports, accounts and administrative texts by some of its leading protagonists, including Miguel Hidalgo y Costilla, Agustín de Iturbide, and Viceroy José de Iturrigaray. The correspondence of the Iturbide family represents, for instance, an exceptional primary source documenting the social and political turmoil of that time. Additionally, the account written by Gregorio Melero y Piña, a follower of Miguel Hidalgo, is vivid personal testimony of military and political conspiracies in San Luis Potosí. There are also original texts written about the political milieu by Carlos Mariá Bustamante, the most important Mexican historian of the early nineteenth century.

The history of the First Mexican Empire, established by Agustín de Iturbide after independence was achieved, is documented generally in several letters and official reports which trace its establishment, political opposition to it, and the abdication of Iturbide. On the initial decades of the Mexican Republic, there are diverse and numerous materials, including military and diplomatic reports, constitutional texts, and administrative papers.

The entire collection, with the exception of Accession 2006-M-021 and Accession 2013-M-025, is available on microfilm. Patrons must use FILM HM 248 instead of the originals.

Part II. I: Chronological, 1522-1915

The chronological series consists of original documents and copies of texts that cover Mexican history from the early years of the Spanish conquest to the Mexican Revolution of the early twentieth century. The series contains ordinances, royal decrees, legal proceedings, reports, speeches and discourses, correspondence, notarial acts, verse, maps, appointments, eulogies, accounts of events, censuses, account books, treasury records, schedules of fees, indices, petitions, church documents and ecclesiastical records, and newspaper articles. The series is particularly strong for the study of the late colonial period, war of independence era, and early years of the Mexican republic. The subsequent history of Mexico is not as well documented. Only a limited number of texts treat the Porfiriato, and the Mexican Revolution.

One of the great strengths of the chronological series is a treasure trove of documents from and about San Luis Potosí. The manuscripts span the dates of the collection (1522-1915) and are most numerous for the national period. These texts detail every aspect of the state's history and also touch upon many of the important events and trends in Mexican history. Among the topics dealt with are floods, religious orders, settlement of the region, taxation, secularization of missions, slavery, education, the independence movement, acts of the San Luis Potosí ayuntamiento, Santa Anna's occupation of San Luis Potosí in 1823, Masonic lodges, military rebellions, government affairs, the expulsion of the Spanish, the San Juan de Dios Hospital, dam construction, the assassination of Governor Julián de los Reyes, the Mexican War, seizure of religious property, the state of the newly created dioceses of San Luis Potosí, Banco Nacional de Amortización, police regulations, a cholera epidemic, construction of churches and public buildings, and mining. There also several censuses, the most important of which date to 1790 and to the early 1820s. One census presents a detailed enumeration of the six cuarteles (wards) of San Luis Potosí city.

Texts dealing with the colonial era are rich and diverse, and the documents lend themselves to the study of a variety of topics. Copies of three reports written by viceroys for their successors serve as excellent sources for the study of civil administration. The large number of royal decrees, orders, and viceregal bands also concern civil administration, and can be used to study imperial finances; judicial topics; political affairs, social concerns, economic issues, and religious matters; and military circumstances of Spain's richest New World possession.

Some manuscripts are useful for the study of colonial economic development. There is a detailed set of instructions for the planting and cultivation of flax and hemp, issued by Viceroy Branciforte; a report concerning a royal decree to create a company to provide investment capital for mines; and copies of documents from a legal dispute over profits from an exclusive right of patent to an improvement of the "patio" silver refining process. Also of interest is a small illustrated volume by Enrico Martínez concerning the functions of the "rueda boladera," a mule powered wheel used in sugar processing, wheat refining, and pumping water.

Silver mining was the driving force of Mexico's colonial economy. There are many useful texts that document the role of this industry. They include manuscripts written in the mining centers of Pachuca and Guanajuato dealing with the shortage of mercury; a manuscript authored by José de la Borda, one of the colony's wealthiest miners, concerning the state of the silver industry in 1765; two reports, possibly written by Francisco Javier de Gamboa, a noted administrator and jurist, discussing the mines at Real del Monte and mining taxes; an account, authored by a parish priest in Pachuca, describing the usurious practices of merchants who purchased silver in that mining center; a beautifully handdrawn map showing the La Bomba mine in the Real de Capula; and "Ynstrucción pratica del beneficio del metales de oro y plata por amalgama de saturno...." an exceptional text outlining the "patio" process of silver refining, including a day to day description of the process of one refining "hacienda."

Certain texts lend themselves to the study of occupational groups during the colonial era. They include the governing ordinances of the silversmiths' guild, and a series of regulations governing the establishment and conduct of "pulperías," which also touch upon pawnbroking. There are the regulations governing the guild of waxmakers; documents dealing with the alternation of officeholders among two groups of Spanish merchants on the tribunal of the consulado of Mexico; and treatises concerning proposed reforms to the statutes of "colegio de abogados" (lawyers).

The Roman Catholic Church played a central role in the life of colonial society. Texts useful for the study of the church during the era include a discourse by Agustín de la Madre de Dios decrying his religious order's prohibition against admitting Creoles. There is a list of the monasteries, colegios, and missions belonging to the discalced Franciscan order in Mexico that names priests, students, and laymen serving at each of these institutions; "Brebe apostólico sobre el reglamento de las misiones de Californias Monterrey y Sonora," is a two part text dealing with Spain's right to organize and administer the frontier. Part two, written by Manuel de la Vega in 1781, includes the statutes for the missions in the borderlands. Also of interest is a text dealing with the election of the "prelada" of the Santa Teresa la Nueva Convent in Mexico City.

Mexico City was the largest, wealthiest, and most important city of colonial New Spain. A number of manuscripts document interesting and unusual aspects of the history of this imperial center. A text by Juan de Cevicos deals with the flood that inundated Mexico City in 1629. A series of legal proceedings highlight the illegal sale of new clothing in the city's secondhand market. Two manuscripts concern a proposal for nighttime illumination of streets. One document lists fifty nine water conduits/sewers (alcantarillas) located in the metropolitan area. Two rosters record the prisoners found in the Mexico City jail in 1808. The rosters list each prisoner's name, crime, race, origin, and their date of imprisonment. Finally, an incomplete account book that records the daily entry of taxed and non taxed barley and flour shipments into a municipal granary also contains records from the "abasto de carne" between 1797 and 1802.

The era of Mexican independence is well documented in the series. One outstanding source is a large quantity of personal correspondence addressed to, or from, major and minor figures involved in the struggle for independence. Among these texts are letters written to, or by, Viceroy Venegas, Calleja, and Apodaca; José María Morelos; Ignacio López Rayón; Agustín Itúrbide; José Sotero Castañeda; Manuel Mier y Terán; Leonardo, Miguel, and Victor Bravo; José María Liceaga; Carlos María de Bustamante; José Antonio Torres; José Sixto Verduzgo; José María Cos; and Andrés Quintana Roo. Correspondence to and from Pedro Antonio Gutiérrez spans the independence era and offers many interesting personal insights into the period. An undated, handdrawn map shows the fortified and unfortified royalist villages, as well as the territory held by independence fighters outside of Mexico City. Interesting texts covering the latter period of the war for independence include a document by José de la Cruz describing a number of royalist victories in 1812; accounts by Juana Nepomucena Ramírez and José Felipe Vega of their capture by independence fighters; and texts by Xavier Mina concerning his invasion of Mexico.

The Hidalgo revolt of 1810 1811, one of the key symbolic events of Mexican independence, is particularly well documented. Original manuscripts of particular note include a series of texts describing the last days of Hidalgo's revolt, the final battles, and his capture at Bajan and subsequent trials; a series of depositions taken by Mariano García, who was commissioned to prosecute followers of Hidalgo; and a report on the impact of the revolt on the mining industry around Guanajuato. There are several handwritten copies of original manuscripts made by Jacobo María Sánchez de la Barquera that document the Hidalgo revolt. These copied texts include the corregidor of Querétaro's description of actions taken to oppose the revolt; the bishop elect of Michoacán's excommunication of Hidalgo; the archbishop of Mexico's denunciation of Hidalgo; Colonel Torcuato Trujillo's depiction of the battle of Monte de la Cruces; Diego García Conde's description of his capture by Hidalgo's forces in Guanajuato; and an unknown author's narration of the seizure of Guanajuato and the city's liberation by royalist forces. (Interested researchers should also consult series IV, which contains a number of copies of texts about Miguel Hidalgo and the Mexican independence movement.)

For the national period there are texts that record the significant events of the first fifty years of the Mexican republic. These detail the fall of the first Mexican empire; the invasion of Tampico by a Spanish army in 1829; the Mexican War; La Reforma; the Three Years War; and the European Intervention. Some manuscripts from the national period were written by, or concern, the most renowned figures of Mexican history, including Benito Juárez; Ignacio Comonfort; Guadalupe Victoria; Anastasio Bustamante; Agustín Itúrbide; Antonio López de Santa Anna; Porfirio Díaz; Lucas Alamán; and Maximilian, Emperor of Mexico. There is an original handwritten official order for the emperor's execution, signed by the members of the council of war that judged him in 1867.

The debate over the role of the Catholic Church was one of the most significant and bloody issues of the early national period. Manuscripts that shed insight into the issues include an unsigned opinion from Nuevo Leon concerning the formation of a board to collect the tithe; a letter from the cabildo of Villa Urrutia to Governor Lorenzo de Zavala of the state of Mexico concerning the power of the state over the church; a letter written by Pope Pius IX to President José Joaquín de Herrera stating the pope's good will for Mexico that came about because of President Herrera's attempted rapprochement with the church; a text by the bishop of Michoacán concerning the liberal constitution of 1857; a text detailing the financial exactions by conservatives from religious organizations to pay for the Three Years War; entreaties addressed to Emperor Maximilian from the bishops of Mexico and Michoacán seeking the repeal of the "reform" laws; and a proposal for the reform of the church that Ignacio González Escalante sent to Benito Juárez, after the liberal triumph over French invaders.

The Mexican government was chronically short of money during the early years of the national period. Some interesting texts dealing with Mexican finances of the period include papers of Bartholomew Richards Vigors, which detail an attempt by the Mexican government to obtain a loan from the British firm of Barclay and Herring. A series of three detailed reports or observations, dated 1827, 1842, and 1846 1847, concerns the maritime customs duty schedule, one of the most significant sources of government revenue.

The chronological series contains interesting travel documentation. "Lettres américaines sur les révolutions du Nouveau Monde ou Correspondance de plusieurs Français résidant au Mexique, au Perou, à Buenos Ayres et autres lieux" is a volume of letters in French written by a former soldier or soldiers of Napoleon Bonaparte's army. The letters describe the history, geography, cultures, peoples, economies, and independence movements in New Spain, Peru, Paraguay, Argentina, and Venezuela. There are also letters about Texas and the short lived French colony of Champ d'Asile. Also of interest is a seven page personal letter C. Peck wrote to J. T. Ames from Tepic in 1840. The text offers a first person narrative of Peck's trip through Mexico and contains vivid descriptions of the Havana slave market; the road between Veracruz and Mexico City; festivities in the capital city; rural landscapes; travel conditions within the nation; and the people of Mexico.

The entire collection, with the exception of Accession 2006-M-021 and Accession 2013-M-025, is available on microfilm. Patrons must use FILM HM 248 instead of the originals.

Part II. II: Walter Howe, 1759-1821

The Walter Howe series is comprised of typescript copies of original primary sources. The typescripts were primarily made of documents in the Archivo General de Indias (AGI) in Seville, Spain; the Archivo General de la Nación (AGN) in Mexico City; and other repositories including the Archivo del Antonio del Río; the Biblioteca del Antiguo Colegio de Minería; and the Gazeta del México.

Walter Howe received his B.A. from Yale University in 1929 and a Ph.D. in history from Harvard University in 1938. He used the materials in this series to write his monograph, The Mining Guild of New Spain and its Tribunal General, 1770-1821, which was published in 1949. The book is an institutional history of the guild that controlled the Mexican mining industry and its governing board. The work is divided into eight chapters that examine mining in Mexico prior to 1770; the organization of the mining guild, 1770-1777, and the mining ordinances of 1783; the financial history of the guild's tribunal, 1777-1787; the reorganization of the tribunal, 1786-1793; the administrative and economic activities and accomplishments of the tribunal and other organs of the mining guild; the handling of litigation under the mining ordinances of 1783; mining education; and the history of the tribunal and guild after 1793.

The series is arranged in three sections AGI, AGN, and Other. The materials from the AGI are exclusively from the Audiencia de México branch. Within the Audiencia, materials are organized by legajo number and the expediente number Howe assigned the texts, if provided. The texts from the AGN are from three branches: Cédulas Reales (royal decrees); Minería (mining); and Virreyes (correspondence of the viceroys). The Cédulas Reales materials are organized by volume number, and within volume, by cédula number. The documents from Minería are also organized by volume number. In many cases this is followed by a number assigned by Walter Howe. The Virreyes texts are arranged by series number: either 1a, for the first series (a numerical representation of primera), or 2a, for the second series (a numerical rendering of segunda). The series number is followed by the volume number and the document number when provided. The Other section is comprised of five folders of typescripts, arranged alphabetically by archive.

Folder headings include Walter Howe's descriptions of the materials (in brackets with quote marks), when available. Folder headings in the Minería subsection within the AGN section include summaries of Howe's description (in brackets, with no quote marks), when available.

The entire collection, with the exception of Accession 2006-M-021 and Accession 2013-M-025, is available on microfilm. Patrons must use FILM HM 248 instead of the originals.

Part II. III: Linares, 1858-1868

This series consists of 1.5 linear feet of mostly original manuscripts from Linares, a municipality in the northeastern state of Nuevo León, situated near the Tamaulipas border. Linares is strategically located between Ciudad Victoria, the capital of Tamaulipas, and Monterrey, the capital of Nuevo León, on the railway running to the port of Tampico. The documents in this series are organized chronologically and include accounts, lists, circulars, decrees, orders, indices, periodicals, communications, messages, dispatches, letters, and an account book.

The Linares manuscripts date to one of the more turbulent eras of Mexican history, the late 1850s and 1860s when Benito Juárez and the "liberals" were struggling to implement a series of reforms, fight for Mexico's national sovereignty, and maintain their hold on power. The texts fall into two periods: the Three Years War, also known as the War of the Reform (1858-1861), when Juárez was driven from power by a conservative military coup and forced to seek refuge in Veracruz; and the French Intervention (1862-1867), when Juárez was again driven from power, this time by a French army that occupied Mexico. The French and their Mexican allies declared Mexico an empire, and placed the archduke Maximilian Hapsburg on the throne.

This series also dates to the period Governor Santiago Vidaurri dominated Nuevo León (1855-1864). Vidaurri was a nominal ally of Juárez, and supported many of his policies. The two came into conflict over Vidaurri's goal to maintain Nuevo León's autonomy from the national government. Vidaurri retained this independence because of Nuevo León's location on Mexico's northern frontier, far from the centers of power; customs revenues collected from trade with the United States, and later the Confederacy; and his control of the state militia. Forces loyal to Juárez drove Vidaurri from power on two occasions, briefly in late 1859 and again in 1864. After his final ouster, Vidaurri declared his loyalty to the empire, and became an important advisor in the imperial court.

The materials related to the Three Years War consist of a series of accounts and lists concerning military pay; financial aid provided to the families of military men; cash donations for various causes; sums of money people were assessed as part of forced loans; numbers of horses, mules, cattle, and other animals provided to the military; and amounts of corn, fodder, rice, beans, saddles, arms and other types of provisions supplied to various armed units and different military endeavors. These texts document the exactions of Governor Vidaurri's militias on Linares, and citizen participation in some of the battles of the war. Some of the texts detail the levies on Linares resulting from the conflict that arose from Vidaurri's return to power in 1860.

The manuscripts dating to the French Intervention include imperial decrees; newspapers; official bulletins; texts detailing the final ouster of Governor Vidaurri and the occupation of Nuevo León by imperial forces; and documents about the local conflict between imperial forces, and armies loyal to Benito Juárez. The texts also include a large number of communications to the prefect of the Linares district concerning military, legal, financial, and administrative matters, from the imperial prefect of the department of Nuevo León, the prefects of surrounding villages, and the municipal prefect of Linares. There are also accounts and lists similar to those found for the years of the Three Years War. Of particular significance is an account book that details the amounts of cash donations; sums of forced loans; and the numbers of animals and quantities of provisions given by or taken from the people of Linares over a six year period. The book also lists men who served in the military, worked on fortifications, drove loads of military, and provides a table recording the losses that resulted from the looting and burning of Linares by an armed force of Juárez supporters in 1865. Overall this account book provides a detailed look at the costs and exactions of the war on the local economy.

The entire collection, with the exception of Accession 2006-M-021 and Accession 2013-M-025, is available on microfilm. Patrons must use FILM HM 248 instead of the originals.

Part II. IV: Sánchez de la Barquera Family, 1528-1908

The series consists of handwritten notes; correspondence; copies of original primary sources; poetry and verse; essays and articles; and newspaper clippings. They were created by, or written about, Juan Wenceslao Sánchez de la Barquera and Jacobo María Sánchez de la Barquera; the series is arranged in two sections, one for each man.

Juan Wenceslao Sánchez de la Barquera (1779-1840) was a noted journalist and the editor of Diario de México. He was also an ardent supporter of the independence movement. After the foundation of the Mexican republic, Sánchez de la Barquera occupied a variety of state and federal offices. He was also one of the first persons to advocate the celebration of September 16th, the anniversary of the "Grito de Dolores," as Mexico's independence day. Materials in this section consist of biographical data, copies of Juan Wenceslao's newspapers articles and essays; and poetry written by and about him.

Jacobo María Sánchez de la Barquera was Juan Wenceslao Sánchez de la Barquera's son. There is very little biographical information available about him. Jacobo María was a prolific writer and note taker, who had a great concern for his father's position in Mexican history. The materials in this section deal with many aspects of Mexican history, from the colonial period to the late nineteenth century, but especially focus on the war for independence and the major figures of the independence movement. The section includes copies of Jacobo María's articles and essays, and some original correspondence.

The entire collection, with the exception of Accession 2006-M-021 and Accession 2013-M-025, is available on microfilm. Patrons must use FILM HM 248 instead of the originals.

Part II. V: Visual, Circa 1865-1911

This series is comprised of a number of different visual mediums and is arranged in two sections: lithographs, drawings, illustrations, engravings, and prints; and photographs. The lithographs, drawings, illustrations, engravings, and prints are organized under the following subheadings: cartoons; coats of arms; events; Historia de Jalapa illustrations; places; and portraits. The drawings are of particular interest. Some illustrate historical events such as Agustín Itúrbide and Vicente Guerrero's "Abrazo de Actempam," the "Grito de Dolores," and "El 5 de Mayo de 1862," commemorating the Mexican victory over the French at Puebla. These artists' renderings offer insights into the later historical portrayal of these events. Other drawings provide a glimpse of such major Mexican cities as Guanajuato, Puebla, and Querétaro. They provided the only visual representations of the urban landscape prior to the rise of photography as a popular pastime. The photographs are arranged in the following order: Columbus monument, Francisco Madero, military, portraits, San Luis Potosí, unidentified, and photograph albums. Of interest is the album, "Old Mexico, 1895," which contains many photographs of streets scenes and images from daily life in Mexico.

The entire collection, with the exception of Accession 2006-M-021 and Accession 2013-M-025, is available on microfilm. Patrons must use FILM HM 248 instead of the originals.
