Biographical / Historical

James Gustave Speth (1942-) is a lawyer, activist, author, and advocate for the environment. He was born in Orangeburg, South Carolina, and spent his childhood there before graduating from Yale College in 1964 (Jonathan Edwards College). He then attended the University of Oxford as a Rhodes Scholar and subsequently Yale Law School (JD, 1970). Speth states that his early life in Orangeburg shaped his attitudes both towards both the environment and social policy.

Upon finishing law school, Speth became a founding member and senior attorney of the Natural Resources Defense Council (NRDC). With the NRDC, he brought civilian suits against the United States government on behalf of environmental issues. He left the NRDC, in 1977 to work for the Jimmy Carter's United States presidential administration as first a member, and then chair, of the White House Council on Environmental Quality (CEQ). During this time, Speth became increasingly aware of the dangers of climate change, and in 1979 he asked prominent ecologists to write a report on global warming.

Following his work on the CEQ, Speth continued to advocate for the environment by launching and leading the World Resources Institute (WRI) in 1982 with the help of funds from a grant from the John D. and Catherine T. MacArthur Foundation. With the WRI, he continued to work on focusing global environmental attention on climate change and other environmental issues.

Shortly after the presidential election of Bill Clinton in 1990, Speth joined the presidential transition team as the head of the environmental team. This position led him to the United Nations Development Programme (UNDP), where a recommendation from Vice President Al Gore led him to become an UNDP administrator. During this time, he was deeply involved with the UNDP's Resident Coordinator Program. The Resident Coordinator Program stationed UNDP offices in underdeveloped regions around the world. Speth was also involved in United Nations Reform, particularly the reforms implemented by Secretary-General Kofi Annan in the 1990s that streamlined the development work done by the United Nations into one agency, the United Nations Development Group (UNDG).

Speth left the UNDP in 1999 to return to Yale University. He became the dean of the School of Forestry and Environmental Science, where he spearheaded the building of Kroon Hall, a then-new building for the school. Kroon Hall is notable for its adherence to sustainability. As dean, Speth taught classes that outlined his concerns on the environmental crisis, which resulted in his book Red Sky at Morning: America and the Crisis of the Global Environment. Speth later wrote the book The Bridge at the Edge of the World, a book that emerged from the DeVane lecture series, also at Yale University.

Speth retired from Yale University in 2009 to accept a teaching position at Vermont Law School. During his time at Vermont Law School, he wrote Angels by the River, his memoir.

In addition to his career in environmental law, Speth has also served as a fellow in research and innovation organizations, including Tellus Institute. He also received awards for his work in law, development, and environmentalism, including the Lifetime Achievement Award of the Environmental Law Institute.

Biographical information in this note is primarily drawn from James Gustave Speth, Angels by the River: A Memoir (White River Junction: Chelsea Green Publishing, 2014)

Scope and Contents

The James Gustave Speth Papers consist of Speth's professional papers from 1977 to 2013, with the bulk falling between 1977 and 2000, and covers much of his career in environmental law. This material also documents his career in global development, particularly in facilitating the development of third world countries and creating international policies both on the behalf of the environment and the elimination of poverty.

These materials document Speth's professional activities in the Natural Resources Defense Council, the Council on Environmental Quality, the World Resources Institute, the Clinton Transition, and the United Nations Development Programme. The papers show the progression of Speth's non-academic career and provide insight into his priorities in environmental protection and development, such as access to clean water, encouraging knowledgeable and productive leadership, and global climate change. The papers contain correspondence, speeches, writings, administrative memoranda, press releases, publications, photographs and meeting minutes. This collection does not contain material documenting Speth's personal activities, teaching, or his tenure as dean of the Yale School of Forestry and Environmental Science, the records of which are in School of Forestry and Environmental Studies, Yale University, Records of the Dean (RU 40).

Materials documenting Speth's work on the Natural Resources Defense Council (NRDC) as one of its founders focuses primarily on lawsuits against the United States government, but also contains important documentation on the early history of the NRDC. Speth's position with the NRDC led him to the Council on Environmental Quality, and materials in that series are primarily correspondence pertaining to environmental development and correspondence with the Executive Office of the President of the United States. After leaving the Council of Environmental Quality, Speth's career focused more specifically on the development of impoverished countries and communities, specifically with his work as the founder and president of the World Resources Institute. The United Nations Development Programme series is the most robust and contains significant documentation of Speth's work in development programs that he administrated, such as the Resident Coordinator program. Speth's travel across the world and his activities in international development are documented in travel materials, including itineraries, agendas, and memorandums, as well as photographs from professional events. Photographs are primarily of individuals or professional groups and are mostly unidentified. Additionally, this material provides a snapshot of the larger initiatives taken by the United Nations in the 1990s, including the United Nations reform led by Secretary-General Kofi Annan.

Collection Contents

Series I: Natural Resources Defense Council, 1968–2013

The Natural Resources Defense Council (NRDC) series consists of Speth's professional files between 1968 and 1978.

The Natural Resources Defense Council is an organization founded by Yale Law School graduates, including Speth, that focuses on solving environmental issues through legal action. Speth's work with the NRDC included bringing suits against the United States government regarding clean water that led to better implementation of Clean Water Act, as well as working extensively for the protection of wetlands.

This series documents the early years of Speth's professional life, and some of the earliest work done by the NRDC. Materials include memos, legal case files, and environmental reports by the NRDC. Also included are articles, annual reports, appointment documents, and other administrative documents dating between 1980 and 2013 that document the continued work of the NRDC after Speth departed from the organization.

Series III: World Resources Institute, 1972-2012

The World Resources Institute (WRI) series documents the creation of the World Resources Institute in 1982 and Speth's service as the founder and president. The WRI is a nonprofit organization dedicated to issues of global development, environmental protection, and promoting environmentally sound development for future generations. Speth founded the WRI in 1982 with the aid of a MacArthur Grant and led the institute through 1992. Materials in this series consist of administrative documents, correspondence, papers, statements, and speeches, as well as Speth's daily planners and his schedule. Also included are materials documenting the activities of the WRI from 1992 to 2009, after Speth left the organization.

Series V: United Nations Development Programme, 1971-2010

The United Nations Development Programme (UNDP) series documents Speth's administrative leadership of the UNDP between 1992 and 2000. The United Nations Development Programme is an organization that focuses on the eradication of poverty and assists in the development of policies, institutions, and leadership in countries with high levels of poverty. The organization also focuses on sustainable development to reduce policies that lead to human induced natural disasters and climate change. As the administrator of the UNDP, Speth oversaw several projects, including the Resident Coordinator Programme, and led the UNDP through the United Nations reform that happened in the mid-1990s. Materials in this series include meeting minutes, administrative memos, papers and speeches written by Speth, articles, publications, internal reports, travel documentation, and travel photographs, primarily of events and resident coordinator officers.

Access to Series V, boxes 74-76 is restricted until 1 January 2021 by donor request.

Boxes 82 and 83 include original audiovisual materials and may not be played. Researchers must consult use copies, or if none exist must pay for a use copy, which is retained by the repository. Researchers wishing to obtain an additional copy of non-commercially produced items for their personal use should consult the ordering reproductions information on the Manuscripts and Archives web site.

Series V is arranged in seven groupings: General files; Executive Committee; General Assembly; Publications; Resident Coordinator; Speeches, papers, and statements; United Nations reform; and Photographs. These groupings are all arranged chronologically, except Publications, which is arranged alphabetically.
