Marc Allégret (1900-1973)
Marc Allégret, a French screenwriter and filmmaker, was born in Basel, Switzerland and trained as a lawyer. After travelling in French equatorial Africa in the mid 1920s with André Gide, Allégret chose to pursue a career in the film industry. He directed his first feature-length film, Mam’zelle Nitouche, in 1931 and went on to write numerous scripts and direct more than fifty films. He was the elder brother of Yves Allégret, also a filmmaker. Additional information is available in standard print and online biographical resources.

The following chronology provides dates for key events and film projects for which there are files in the collection:

Scope and Contents
The Marc Allégret papers feature material relating to films shot or directed by Allégret and to his association with André Gide. Allégret’s working files include screenplays, shooting scripts, correspondence, background and research materials, production notes and documents, cut film, photographs, and printed ephemera dating from his earliest cinematic effort, the documentary Voyage au Congo (1927), to his last feature-length film, Le bal du comte d’Orgel (1970). Allégret became acquainted with Gide through his father’s friendship and his travels with Gide into Africa in the mid 1920s are richly documented in the production files, which include correspondence, manuscript notes, photographs, and ephemera, for Voyage au Congo. Other materials relating more or less directly to Gide include the production files for the late documentary Avec André Gide (1952), corrected drafts and proofs for several titles by Gide from the 1920s, and third-party correspondence. Works by Others also include screenplays and shooting scripts by some of Allégret’s collaborators. General correspondence consists of letters to Marc Allégret from Françoise Giroud, Roger Martin du Gard, and Roger Vadim, with over seventy pieces of correspondence from Martin du Gard. Third Party correspondence features approximately thirty pieces of correspondence between Marc Allégret’s father, Elie Allégret, and André Gide, and include letters from Gide’s wife Madeleine, Roger Martin du Gard, and producer Pierre Braunberger. Chiefly in French, with some materials in German and English.

Series I. Works by Marc Allégret

4.17 linear feet (11 boxes)

Series I, Works by Marc Allégret, housed in boxes 1-11, consists of material relating to films shot or directed by Allégret throughout his career as a filmmaker. Materials include screenplays, shooting scripts, correspondence, background and research materials, production notes and documents, cut film, photographs, and printed ephemera. There are screenplays or shooting scripts for over a dozen feature-length films and larger, mixed files for three documentaries, Voyage au Congo (1927), Occultisme et magie (1951), and Avec André Gide (1952).

The files for Voyage au Congo, including correspondence, manuscript material, photographs, and printed ephemera, document Allégret’s travels with André Gide through French equatorial Africa in the mid-1920s—Gide’s journals were also published shortly after their return as Voyage au Congo (1927) and Retour du Tchad (1928). Material identified in the list below as “Notes and notebooks” preserves folders of letters, background material, itineraries, lists of supplies, financial records, journal entries, ethnographic observations, language aids, and other papers. Correspondence relating chiefly to distribution of the documentary, as well as to publication of photographs, can be found in the “Correspondence” folders, which date from 1927 to 1930, while correspondence relating to travel can be found scattered throughout the “Notes and notebooks”. Correspondents include Kodak founder George Eastman, to whom there is a draft of a letter, in English, soliciting camera equipment for “artistic and scientific research,” and colleagues of Allégret’s father, Elie, at the Société des mission évangéliques de Paris.

The Voyage au Congo materials in Series I complement the research materials, drafts, and proofs relating to Gide’s travel writings in Series II. Together these two groups of material document travel through areas now known as the Republic of the Congo, the Central African Republic, Chad, and Cameroon, and aspects of life in parts of these countries, including colonial attitudes and relationships.

Allégret’s documentary on André Gide, released shortly after Gide’s death in 1951, combines still photographs, documentary and newsreel footage, and interviews. Files for the film include correspondence, manuscript material, and cut film. The manuscript material (also identified in the list as “Notes”) preserves folders of correspondence, lists of photographs and documents used in the film, drafts of interviews and commentary, financial records, and other papers relating to the production and distribution of the film. Correspondents include: Gaston Criel, Henri Langlois of the Cinémathèque française, Jean Duché, Jean Schlumberger, René Gustave Nobécourt, Jean-Louis Barrault, Roger Martin du Gard, Justin O’Brien, Pierre Herbart, Philippe Halsman, Yvonne Davet, Georges Sirot, and many others; included are letters to and from Allégret’s assistant Pierre Boursaus.

The files for Occultisme et magie, including correspondence, printed ephemera, photographs, and manuscript material, feature drafts of interviews, essays, and notes on the following topics: astrology, black magic, occultism and science, parapsychology, alchemy, hypnotism, faith and medicine healers, spiritualism, yoga, and fakirs. There is material by or relating to Robert Amadou, Jean Piverd, Jean Auscher, Scarha-Bey, Jean Thévenot, and others.

Many of Allégret’s feature films, such as L’Amant de Lady Chatterly and Le Bal du Comte d’Orgel, were adapted from literary works, and the dialogue and/or screenplays were either written by others or in collaboration with Allégret. Contributors include Marcel Achard, Françoise Giroud, H. G. Lustig, Charles de Peyret-Chappuis, and Carlo Rim. French composer Georges Auric also wrote scores for a number of Allégret’s films, and music to a theatrical adaptation of Volpone by Jules Romains can be found in Series II.

Cut film is stored in cold storage.

Series II. Works by Others

1.25 linear feet (3 boxes)

Series II, Works by Others, housed in boxes 12-14, consists of two main groups of materials, writings by André Gide and screenplays and shooting scripts by some of Allégret’s cinematic collaborators. The Gide materials feature corrected proofs, as well as a couple drafts, for several titles dating between 1919 and 1927. There are proofs, for example, for Gide’s travel journals, Voyage au Congo (1927) and Retour du Tchad (1928), which are complemented by the extensive notes and materials relating to Allégret’s documentary project in Series I, as well as for La symphonie pastorale and Corydon. In addition, there are drafts for Retour du Tchad and an essay, entitled “Les villages des tribus Massas”, based on his travels.

The screenplays and shooting scripts listed in Series II are for works that were not realized, such as Prévert’s “Comme la plume au vent”, or filmed by another director, such as Drôle de drame and Les visiteurs du soir, both of which were directed by Marcel Carné. Contributors include Françoise Giroud, Pierre Larouche, Roger Martin du Gard, Jacques Prévert, Jules Romaine, and Roger Vadim.

Arranged alphabetically first by name of author, then by title.
