KURT WOLFF (1887-1963)

In writing about Kurt Wolff shortly after the purchase of his early papers in 1947, Curt von Faber du Faur, curator of the Yale Collection of German Literature, had this to say about his old friend:

"Not every literary generation enjoys the privilege and the benefits of being fostered by an ideal type of publisher, who in one person combines great business acumen with broad scholarship and the requisite love of the fine arts; who carries in his heart a great spiritual tradition which enhances his judgment and sharpens his skills to detect the true values in the present and preserve them for the future. In the Germany of recent years this ideal was personified by Kurt Wolff. During the second and third decades of the present century he gathered about himself virtually all the leading spirits of the younger generation of authors. Most of the outstanding names of this period passed through the portals of his publishing house to recognition and fame; or at least felt themselves honored to have gained the renown of his imprint for one or more of their works. There was scarcely an author who failed to correspond with this keen-visioned publisher who so soon gained for himself the reputation of a tried and true sponsor to his literary friends. It is for this reason that the literary archives of the firm Kurt Wolff, recently acquired by the Library, contain in fact the epistolary heritage of the spiritual center of the Germany of that period."

(YULG 23:1, 1948, 25)

Kurt Wolff was born in 1887 in Bonn, into a musical household where Brahms was a frequent guest. His first activities as a publisher date from around 1909, when he was studying German literature at Leipzig. There he joined Ernst Rowohlt's fledgling publishing firm, which had been founded the year before. Office space was rented from the Offizin W. Drugulin, well-known for its bibliophile productions. A close relation quickly sprang up between the two firms; the Drugulin Drucke series was in fact overseen by Kurt Wolff.

Rowohlt left the firm in 1912; he joined the S. Fischer Verlag and subsequently established his own publishing house after World War I. In 1913 Wolff changed the name of the old Rowohlt Verlag, of which he was now sole proprietor, to the Kurt Wolff Verlag. When Wolff was called up for military service during the war, the operation was capably run by Georg Heinrich Meyer, many of whose letters will be found among the Yale papers. Wolff returned in 1916.

These early years of the Kurt Wolff Verlag were marked by rapid expansion, undoubtedly due to Wolff's ability to seek out and attract interesting authors and Meyer's genius for advertising. There were highly successful series, such as Der jüngste Tag, 86 volumes of which appeared between 1913 and 1921. A close connection was established with the Verlag der weissen Bücher, which published the influential literary periodical Die weissen Blätter. In 1917, both the Verlag der weissen Bücher and the Hyperion Verlag were acquired by Wolff. A survey of the author list in this register will demonstrate the truth of Faber's statement, cited above, that Wolff was able during these years to gather to himself the leading spirits of the day. There were Expressionists (Benn, Heym, Toller, Trakl), Dadaists (Ball, Hülsenbeck, Tzara), and, presaging Kurt Wolff's interest in art publishing, a number of artists (Gauguin, Grosz, Klee, Kokoschka, Kollwitz, Kubin, Masereel). Correspondence with numerous prominent literary figures is to be found in Kurt Wolff's files: Gerhart Hauptmann, Hesse, Kafka, Karl Kraus, Else Lasker-Schüler, Heinrich and Thomas Mann, Rilke, Werfel, and Wedekind, to name just a few. Nor is the list strictly German, for the collection contains letters by such writers as Gorky, James Joyce, Rabindranath Tagore, and H. G. Wells.

After the war, Kurt Wolff turned more and more toward publishing collected editions rather than new works, toward art publishing, and to the pursuit of his bibliophile interests. In 1920 a close connection with the Ernst Ludwig Presse in Darmstadt was established, and in 1924 Kurt Wolff founded the Pantheon Casa Editrice in Florence, with Hans Mardersteig of the Officina Bodoni as guiding light to the new enterprise.

In 1930, in the wake of personal stress (overwork and divorce) and business difficulties, Kurt Wolff withdrew from publishing. Between 1933 and 1935 he lived in Nice, where a son, Christian, was born to him and his second wife, Helen Mosel. In 1935 the family acquired a farm outside Florence, where they began an experiment in self-sufficiency. In 1939 they moved to Paris. Although the ensuing political events split the family temporarily (Kurt Wolff was incarcerated briefly, the child was sent to the safety of a convent school at La Rochelle), they managed to reunite themselves, escape across the Spanish border, and immigrate to the United States in 1940.

One of Kurt Wolff's principal advisors and supporters in the United States was the curator of Yale's German Literature Collection, Curt von Faber du Faur. Faber offered Kurt Wolff $7,500 as a kind of matching grant: Wolff was to raise an equal amount in order to establish himself anew in business. This he did: Pantheon Books was founded in 1942, at first on the proverbial shoestring but soon attaining a large measure of success. Kurt Wolff had the good fortune to meet Paul Mellon, for whom he published the well-known Bollingen Series. Best-sellers followed: Anne Morrow Lindbergh's Gift from the Sea and the American edition of Pasternak's Doctor Zhivago (1958), for instance. Books like Broch's The Death of Virgil (1945), while undoubtedly not financial successes, showed Wolff's continuing dedication to what he deemed to be worthwhile and timely literature.

In 1959 Helen and Kurt Wolff moved to Locarno. By 1961, however, it proved too difficult to manage the firm from abroad, and they resigned from Pantheon Books, which was acquired by Random House. William Jovanovitch subsequently proposed to the Wolffs that they should oversee a special imprint within Harcourt, Brace, Jovanovitch. The proposal was accepted, but not long after the launching of Helen and Kurt Wolff Books, Kurt Wolff was tragically run down and killed by a truck during a visit to Germany in 1963. Helen Wolff continued with Harcourt, Brace, and Jovanovitch until her retirement, overseeing Helen and Kurt Wolff Books until her death in 1994.

Scope and Contents

The Kurt Wolff papers at Yale consist of about 4,100 letters, telegrams, postcards, documents, and manuscripts from the business files of the Kurt Wolff Verlag, mostly from the period 1910-30. There is no material relating to Kurt Wolff's career as a publisher in the United States. Incoming correspondence from authors is interfiled with copies of letters and other communications by Kurt Wolff and members of the Verlag. Some author files also contain contracts, financial statements, and manuscripts.

The largest single correspondence is that between Franz Werfel and the Verlag, which numbers over 900 items including poetry manuscripts and letters by Werfel's wife Alma Mahler Werfel. There are 605 items of correspondence with Walter Hasenclever, a close friend of Wolff from his Leipzig student days. The letters from Franz Kafka (47 items, 1912-20) constitute one of the high points of the collection.

Most of the letters in the collection are directed to Kurt Wolff himself, but some are addressed to persons associated with the Kurt Wolff Verlag, including Georg Heinrich Meyer, Hans Mardersteig, Ernst Rowohlt, Kurt Pinthus, Erik Ernst Schwabach, Lothar Mohrenwitz, René Schickele, Annemarie von Puttkamer, Arthur Seiffhart, and Daniel Brody. Letters written between 1907 and 1912 are addressed to the Ernst Rowohlt Verlag. Some letters are directed to the Hyperion Verlag, the Verlag der weissen Bücher, Der neue Geist Verlag, Genius Verlag, and the Verlag der Schriften von Karl Kraus, all of which were part of the Kurt Wolff Verlag at some time.

Many of the letters written in German script are provided with typed transcriptions that were made by Yale graduate students under the supervision of Hedwig S. Dejon, librarian of the Yale Collection of German Literature. Soon after its acquisition, the Kurt Wolff Archive was catalogued on cards, with main entries for each of the authors with whom the Kurt Wolff Verlag corresponded. These cards give more detailed information about the material than the following list. They have been retained by the curator of the collection.

Many, although by no means all of the letters in the Yale Kurt Wolff Archive were published by Bernhard Zeller and Ellen Otten in Kurt Wolff. Briefwechsel eines Verlegers. 1911-1963 (Frankfurt: Heinrich Scheffler, 1966). The photocopies used to compile this volume are still on deposit at the Deutsches Literaturarchiv in Marbach, West Germany, where they can be made available to scholars who apply for Yale's permission to examine the material.

Related material will be found in the Helen Wolff papers (Uncat Zg Ms 12), which documents the American phase of Mrs. Wolff's career but also contains some earlier materials.

Arrangement

This archive consists of letters to and from Kurt Wolff, among which literary writings of some correspondents have been interfiled. The correspondence has been alphabetically arranged and all letters have been placed in chronological order within each folder.
