Biographical / Historical

Loomis Havemeyer was born in Rye, New York on June 7, 1886 to Charles W. Havemeyer and Julia Ida Loomis Havemeyer. Havemeyer's paternal great-grandfather, William Havemeyer, established the sugar refining business in North America (1807), and his grandfather, William Frederick Havemeyer, was elected mayor of New York City, during the mid-19th century, on three separate occasions. Havemeyer's maternal grandfather, Francis Bolles Loomis, was lieutenant governor of Connecticut from 1887 to 1889. Havemeyer lived his early childhood years in Brooklyn, New York while his father managed one of the Havemeyer sugar refineries. Havemeyer's mother, after learning of her husband's infidelities, moved her two children to Hartford, Connecticut (ca. 1890) and was later granted a divorce. A bequeathment of $200,000 from Julia's brother-in-law, Hector Havemeyer, helped secure the family's financial independence.

Havemeyer attended the Hill School in Pottstown, Pennsylvania and in 1907 entered Sheffield Scientific School at Yale University. After receiving a Ph.B in philosophy (1910S), Havemeyer pursued graduate study at Yale in anthropology under Albert Galloway Keller, who, according to Havemeyer, "had the ability of making a man feel on the heights and in the depths in the same breath." Keller openly expressed his concern that Havemeyer did not have the maturity or commitment necessary to pursue graduate work seriously; Keller then advised Havemeyer not to be discouraged under any circumstances should he choose to pursue a career in academics. In 1912, Havemeyer received his M.A. in anthropology and after presenting his dissertation, "The Drama of Savage Peoples," he was awarded a Ph.D. in 1915. In 1925, Havemeyer taught a class on social evolution in the Sheffield Scientific School. Keller was opposed to the course, believing it to be "subversive" to the department. The rift ultimately resulted in the dissolution of their professional and personal relationship.

Throughout his four decade career at Yale, Havemeyer held many positions in both academic and administrative capacities. Havemeyer's academic appointments included instructor of geography and anthropology (1913-1919); instructor of geography (1919-1920); instructor of anthropology (1920-1921); instructor of anthropology and economic geography (1921-1923); lecturer (1923-1925); assistant professor of anthropology (1925-1934); assistant professor of social sciences (1934-1937); assistant professor of evolution (1937-1941); and lecturer (1941-1954). Despite numerous teaching positions, Havemeyer is remembered more for his administrative contributions, most notably as registrar of Sheffield Scientific School (1919-1929). Additional administrative duties included assistant dean (1929-1941) and associate dean (1941-1945) of Sheffield Scientific School; registrar of the School of Engineering (1932-1954); director of undergraduate registration (1945-1948); associate dean in charge of undergraduate registration (1941-1954); and director of undergraduate schedules and allocations (1954-1969). In 1967, Havemeyer was awarded the Yale Medal of Honor in recognition of his continuing role in the operation of the university.

Havemeyer was very involved in the Yale community in informal capacities as well. As an undergraduate, he was a member of the Book and Snake Society as well as a co-founder of the Aurelian Honor Society, in both of which he actively participated throughout his life. He was also a great supporter of the Yale Dramat, claiming to have attended over 270 performances.

Beginning in the summer of 1901 and throughout his undergraduate years, Havemeyer traveled extensively with his mother and sister to Eastern and Western Europe, Canada, the Northwestern United States, and Alaska. On a number of occasions he was a guest in the home of the Baron and Baroness von Munchausen and in 1911 was invited by Annette von Munchausen to attend a dance given for the Duke and Duchess of Coburg.

Havemeyer's reputation was that of a generous person with a philanthropic nature. Much of his giving was done anonymously, as in the case of Carnes Weeks, a student whose medical education Havemeyer financed. Havemeyer never married and with the death, in 1941, of his sister, Julia Loomis Havemeyer, he was left with no immediate relatives. Yale became the major beneficiary of his wealth when in 1949, Havemeyer established the "Loomis and Julia Havemeyer Fund" for students in science and engineering. In 1958, with a gift of $40,000, Havemeyer established the "Timothy Dwight College Fellowship Fund," in order to bring distinguished artists in the areas of arts and literature to the college. In 1969 he established the "Julia Havemeyer Musical Fellowship," at the Yale School of Music, to provide a fellowship for advanced students of music.

In addition to music, theater, and dinner parties, Havemeyer enjoyed writing and became an avid chronicler of Yale history and traditions, especially after his official retirement in 1954. Many writings were published privately with his own money and distributed to friends. His writings on Yale history and traditions included Aurelian Honor Society of Yale University and Its Times; Eating at Yale, 1701-1965; Go to Your Room: Undergraduate Societies and Fraternities at Yale; The Engineering Heritage at Yale; A History of Book and Snake; A History of Timothy Dwight College; Sheff Days and Ways; Out of Yale's Past; Then and Now; Undergraduate Yale in the Second World War; Yale's Extracurricular and Social Organizations, 1780-1960; and Yale, 1930-1946. "The Drama of Savage Peoples" (dissertation), Ethnography (co-authored with A. G. Keller), and The Conservation of Our Natural Resources comprised Havemeyer's published scholarly contributions. Autobiographical writings such as "These Things I Remember" and "The Years Since My Retirement, 1954-?" recollect events and experiences throughout his life. Havemeyer died on August 14, 1971.

Scope and Contents

The papers of Loomis Havemeyer document his personal life and, to a lesser extent, his professional career at Yale University. His autobiographical writings and diaries provide the most comprehensive sources regarding Havemeyer's personal life. Information relating to his writings on Yale history and traditions is mostly found in his autobiographical writing, "The Years Since My Retirement, 1954-?". Correspondence between Albert Galloway Keller and Havemeyer documents some of Keller's ideas regarding curriculum within the anthropology department and gives insight into the manner in which Keller interacted with students and colleagues. Both Loomis Havemeyer's and Julia Loomis Havemeyer's [sister] travel diaries provide descriptions of countries, people, and customs encountered during their summer travels to Eastern and Western Europe, the Orient, the Middle East, North Africa, the Northern United States, Alaska, and Hawaii, in the years of 1901-1914 and 1936. Julia Loomis Havemeyer's diaries, in particular, furnish detailed descriptions and views of other cultures through the perspective of an educated New England woman traveling during the early 20th century. Official records created during Havemeyer's administrative career at Yale have been transferred to the Yale University Archives.

Arrangement

Arranged in four series: I. Correspondence. II. Writings and Speeches. III. Personal Papers and Photographs. IV. Julia Loomis Havemeyer.

Collection Contents

Series I: Correspondence, 1905-1970

Composed mainly of incoming letters, the series is arranged alphabetically by individual or corporate name within two sections: General and World War II correspondence. In both sections, correspondence is fragmentary and predominantly personal in nature. The dates range from 1905 to 1970 with the bulk falling between 1920 and 1950. Correspondence regarding the publication of writings is filed in Series II under the title of the work it concerns. Correspondence regarding Yale appointments is filed in Series III under Financial, Yale University.

General correspondence is comprised of congratulatory letters, thank-you notes and personal greetings. Many of the correspondents were members of the Aurelian Honor Society or the Book and Snake Society and references to both societies are scattered throughout the letters in the section. Correspondence regarding the publication of a memorial pamphlet dedicated to Book and Snake members killed in World War I or World War II is filed under Book and Snake. Included in the Albert Galloway Keller file is correspondence relating to Havemeyer's relationship with Keller, as both a student and colleague, as well as details of the rift which prompted the dissolution of their personal and professional relationship. Correspondence between Havemeyer and his beneficiary, Carnes Weeks, consists mainly of incoming letters containing fairly routine descriptions of Weeks' activities while a medical student. Brief correspondence regarding Havemeyer's flirtation with a career in the federal government's department of statistics is filed under Herbert Hoover. The Yale University file contains letters from the Art Gallery, the Conservation Program, the Library, and the Peabody Museum acknowledging gifts from Havemeyer.

During World War II, Havemeyer corresponded with a number of Yale students serving in the military. These incoming letters are fairly routine in their chronicling of daily military life and thoughts on the war. Some letters contain reminiscences of gatherings at Havemeyer's residence and provide insight into the students' social relationships with Havemeyer and their "devotion" to him.

Series II: Writings and Speeches, 1911-1966

Writings are comprised of published and unpublished books, pamphlets, articles, and a play script dramatizing Horace Vachell's book The Hill. They are arranged alphabetically by title and include manuscripts, correspondence, clippings, and receipts associated with a particular title. The majority of the correspondence is between Havemeyer and publishing companies and documents his efforts to publish his work. Havemeyer's autobiographical writings, "These Things I Remember" and "The Years Since My Retirement, 1954-?," along with the audio tape from his memorial service (Series III), provide the most comprehensive overview of his life. "These Things I Remember", in particular, furnishes details regarding his parents, grandparents, his childhood in Hartford, Connecticut, his educational experiences, travels abroad, and his career at Yale University. "The Years Since My Retirement, 1954-?" is the primary source for information regarding his writings on Yale history and traditions. Havemeyer describes the impetus behind each book and provides a list of resources he consulted while researching the topic. Both autobiographical works document Havemeyer's interests, beliefs, biases, and relationships, both personal and professional.

Speeches are arranged alphabetically according to place of presentation. The majority of them are in the form of handwritten or typed notes on cards.

Series III: Personal Papers and Photographs, 1900-1971

This series is arranged alphabetically by record type and includes appointment books, diaries, financial records, legal papers, memorabilia, memorials, photographs, and scrapbooks. Diaries comprise the largest and most substantive portion of the series. Havemeyer's travel diaries (1901-1903) provide brief descriptions of accommodations and travel conditions in Eastern and Western European countries, as well as accounts of sites visited and observations on local customs and people. While attending the Hill School, Havemeyer began keeping "Line a Day" diaries, a practice he continued throughout his life. The most detailed entries coincide with his years as a student at the Hill School and his undergraduate and graduate years at Yale. Some entries provide insight into personal and professional relationships; the majority of entries furnish synopses of daily activities. After 1903, Havemeyer recorded travel notes in the "Line a Day" diaries rather than in separate travel diaries. In later years the diary entries become heavily routine and minimal and, especially in later years, increasingly illegible. Havemeyer relied on the "Line a Day" diaries for his books on Yale history and traditions and his autobiographical works. Included in this series is the diary of Mrs. Henry House of Hartford, Connecticut (1900). The Houses socialized with the Havemeyer family and occasional mention is made of Loomis Havemeyer and Julia Ida Loomis Havemeyer. The majority of entries are recapitulations of the House family's daily activities with minimal allusions to Hartford's social scene. According to Havemeyer's inscription in the diary, he had no knowledge as to how it came into his possession.

The audio tape of Havemeyer's memorial service offers further insight into Havemeyer's personality and life from the perspective of a friend and colleague by way of eulogy.

Series IV: Julia Loomis Havemeyer, 1899-1914, 1936, 1941, undated

This series contains the papers of Loomis Havemeyer's older sister, Julia (ca. 1874-December 8, 1941). Julia, financially independent and unmarried, resided in Hartford, Connecticut until her death. The series is arranged alphabetically by record type and includes genealogical materials, notebooks, photographs, travel diaries, and writings.

The travel diaries of Julia Loomis Havemeyer comprise the largest and most substantive portion of the series and are arranged chronologically. Traveling nearly every summer with her mother and brother, Julia wrote very detailed descriptions of her traveling experiences. Entries describe sites visited, excursions taken, travel accommodations, individuals encountered, as well as observations on local customs, dress, and people. Many entries are supplemented with postcards, clippings, brochures, maps, and flora, which she used to illustrate the written descriptions. Havemeyer wrote a title across the top of each page that indicates the subject of the entry. The diaries provide insight into her personality and relationships with her mother and brother.

The notebooks are a collection of handwritten notes on subjects such as sculpture, architecture, painting, notable artists, and include brief historical synopses of countries, most likely compiled in preparation for her trips abroad. One notebook contains jottings and clippings of information relating to the royal families of European countries. The writings folder contains the draft of a poem written by Julia in honor of the publication of her brother's dissertation "Drama of Savage Peoples."
