CALL NUMBER: RU 11

CREATOR: Yale University. President's Office

TITLE: Kingman Brewster, Jr., president of Yale University, records

DATES: 1941-1983

BULK DATES: 1961–1977

PHYSICAL DESCRIPTION: 340.25 linear feet (814 boxes)

LANGUAGE: English

SUMMARY: The records of Kingman Brewster, Jr., as president of Yale University, provide extensive documentation on the policies, programs, and operations of Yale, from 1963 to 1977. Of particular significance are Brewster's administrative materials, which comprise Series I-III. Maintained by Brewster's office staff, these comprehensive files contain six general types of documentation: files on Yale academic departments, professional schools, and offices; files on Yale programs and issues; daily information on the president's activities, including materials on executive meetings and travel; documents and publications generated by the president and his staff, such as policy memoranda and open letters to the Yale community in draft and final form; correspondence with students, faculty, staff, alumni, non-alumni, and other institutions, such as foundations and governmental research agencies; and solicited and unsolicited materials, such as promotional bulletins, press releases, agency reports, and clippings, sent to the president from institutions or individuals. The most extensively documented topics within the records are academics, admissions, athletics, alumni activities, operating budgets, development and capital campaigning, donations and grants, personnel policy, buildings and grounds, governance, university committees and councils, and issues directly related to student life. Numerous specific topics and events are documented as well, such as ceremonies to commemorate new Yale buildings, outside requests for use of Yale facilities, concerts and tours by Yale musical organizations, and Yale convocations and conferences, to name a few.

Biographical / Historical

Brewster Biography

Kingman Brewster, Jr., the seventeenth president of Yale University, was born on 17 June 1919 in Longmeadow, Massachusetts. He earned his B.A. in History, Arts, and Letters from Yale University in 1941, and his LL.B. from the Harvard Law School in 1948, magna cum laude. Between degrees, Brewster served in World War II as a naval aviator and was released from active duty in 1945 with the rank of lieutenant.

Brewster taught on the Massachusetts Institute of Technology (MIT) faculty, 1949-1950, and on the Harvard Law School faculty, 1950-1960, being promoted to full professor in 1953. He resigned from Harvard in 1960 and became Yale University provost-designate for the academic year 1960-1961, and then provost the following year.

Brewster became president of Yale in 1963 and remained in office until 1977. While president, he also served on two national commissions formed by the Lyndon B. Johnson administration: the Commission on Law Enforcement and Administration of Justice, 1965-1967, and the National Advisory Commission on Selective Service, 1966-1967; he was also chairman of the United Nations National Policy Panel, 1968. Brewster officially resigned the Yale presidency on 16 May 1977 to serve as ambassador to the Court of St. James, 1977-1981, under President Jimmy Carter. In 1986 he accepted the mastership of University College at Oxford University, Oxford, England, where he stayed until his death on 8 November 1988.

Brewster married Mary Louise Phillips on 30 November 1942 and together they raised five children: Constance, Kingman III, Deborah, Alden, and Riley.

Administrative History

The Brewster presidential administration's primary objective was to raise academic standards comprehensively throughout Yale University. This required the substantial revision of certain existing policies and disciplines, as well as the development of new programs, schools, and departments. President Brewster began this process in the 1960s by significantly increasing the size of the faculty and by actively recruiting renowned non-Yale scholars to fill the positions. According to Brewster, previous Yale administrations tended to overlook high caliber academicians who graduated and specialized outside the university. Approximately fifty percent of those instructing both at the undergraduate and graduate levels in the mid-1950s had earned their degrees from Yale. To reverse this trend, and to help even-out the student-faculty ratio, Brewster carried forward three policies initiated while he was Provost. First, as of 1961, most new professors were to be appointed jointly to the undergraduate college and the graduate school, allowing greater variety and possibility for instructor-student interaction. Second, the administration maintained a university-wide faculty committee to review and approve departmental tenure promotions, so that all disciplines would have to match the administration's overall research and teaching standards. Third, Brewster continued realigning the budget to raise faculty salaries to levels unsurpassed by other higher learning institutions. Growth in new faculty appointments was especially strong in the 1960s, when the instructor-student ratio dropped from 1:11 to 1:7, and the size of the faculty increased by 80 percent. While the graduate school student population doubled, the undergraduate population remained level at 4,000.

As the size of the Yale faculty increased, Brewster's new admissions policies caused the make up of the undergraduate body to shift. By the early 1960s, most undergraduates had prepared at private schools, and many were sons of Yale alumni. As with the faculty, Brewster felt that Yale was consistently overlooking some of the best intellectual student talent necessary to maintain the highest levels of academic excellence. In a 1965 speech to alumni, Brewster summarized his administration's revised recruitment policy by stating that Yale would only seek students whose capacity for intellectual achievement is outstanding and who also have the motivation to put their intellectual capacities to creatively influential use, in thought, in art, in science, or in the exercise of public or private or professional responsibility.

In short, the administration maintained that talent and proven ability, in spite of background, were to be paramount in every application review. Brewster appointed Admissions Dean R. Inslee Clark in 1965 to help bring this recruitment objective to fruition. As well, in 1963, the administration enacted a needs-blind policy for all applicants, so that lack of necessary finances could not become an admissions factor. The inevitable result of these new policy initiatives was a more diversified student body. While angry alumni accused Brewster and Clark of reverse discrimination, the administration argued that public school standards in quality and achievement had risen sharply, justifying tougher and more thorough screening processes for all applicants. As with faculty expansion, the effects of the student body shift were most noticeable throughout the 1960s, during which time the number undergraduates who entered Yale from private schools had dropped from 51 to 38 percent, and alumni sons decreased from 24 to 13 percent. As well, the number of accepted black applicants rose from fifteen in 1965 to one hundred in 1969.

The most dramatic change in the Yale student body came in 1969, when the Brewster administration implemented undergraduate coeducation. Matriculating undergraduate women in fact had been under serious consideration since the beginning of the Brewster presidency. In 1965 the Yale Corporation outlined three conditions necessary for the idea to advance. First, admissions officers could not reduce the number of men admitted each year to Yale College. Second, incremental funds estimated at fifty-five million dollars would have to be allocated. Third, women would actually matriculate through a coordinate college, designed after the Harvard-Radcliffe model. Vassar College, Poughkeepsie, New York, sought out Yale to become the sister institution. The Yale administration engaged in thorough discussions and drew up detailed plans for the merge, but Vassar eventually rejected the idea, since it did not wish to relocate to New Haven. Brewster proposed that coeducation proceed regardless, and, with Yale Corporation support, 500 women attended Yale College in the autumn of 1969. Though some alumni vehemently objected, the administration defended its position based on the tenets of its own educational philosophy: Brewster's mission was to attract the country's best minds to Yale College, which necessitated opening the pool to women.

While the Brewster administration in the early 1970s continued to enact significant policy studies and revisions, aspects of the nation's social climate affecting college students had become volatile and problematic. Race riots had broken out over the past few years in numerous American cities, causing dramatic unrest on many college campuses in response. An event which particularly tested the Brewster administration occurred 1-3 May 1970 known as May Day weekend. Black Panther party chairman Bobby Seale and seven other party members were on trial in New Haven for the murder of fellow party member Alex Rackley. The trial and the cause of the Black Panthers became a major concern of the Yale community. Normal academic activities were suspended in late April and a number of special gatherings were held around campus to discuss the issue. Various sources predicted that 50,000 demonstrators would arrive at the New Haven Green on 1 May to protest perceived unfairness toward the Black Panthers. Brewster decided to open Yale University during the weekend rally for shelter, food, day care, and first aid. Students hosted demonstrators in designated residential college rooms, and many faculty, staff, and students were assigned special duties to help maintain order. Against the wishes of the administration, Connecticut officials brought in the National Guard as a precaution against violent eruptions. Actual attendance, peaking near 15,000 on 1 May, was lower than expected. Speeches given at various Yale sites by prominent protest leaders such as Abbie Hoffman and Jerry Rubin occurred peacefully. Sporadic incidents throughout the night were successfully handled by local police. The next day, fewer numbers gathered for rallies on the Green and protest momentum began to taper. By Sunday 3 May the demonstrators had left New Haven, and the administration pronounced the weekend a success. As academic activities resumed, students who had elected to postpone final exams and projects were given a number of options toward completion without penalty.

Numerous programs were revitalized, expanded, or created during Brewster's tenure. In 1965 the administration secured an affiliation between the Grace-New Haven Community Hospital and the Yale School of Medicine to form the Yale-New Haven Hospital, a major center for medical instruction, research, and practice. The Yale School of Drama was revitalized in 1966 with the appointment of Dean Robert Brustein, and programs such as Afro-American Studies, and the Computer Science Department were proposed and enacted. In undergraduate education, the college seminar program was started, along with the Five Year B.A., also known as Junior Year Abroad. Distributional requirements were suspended, the grading system revised, and credit numbers necessary for graduation reconsidered. The campus Reserve Officers' Training Corps (ROTC) program was phased out during the early 1970s, and study groups such as the Dahl Committee on Undergraduate Education and the Dominguez Study Commission on Governance were organized by the administration to consider further steps toward educational improvement. New buildings were raised as well, including the Becton Engineering and Applied Science Center, the Child Study Center, Kline Biology Tower, the Nuclear Structure Laboratory, and the Center for British Art, designed by prominent architect Louis Kahn. Throughout the 1970s, the administration engaged in intensive capital fund-raising to address the deficit incurred from the extensive expansion of resources and programs achieved in the previous decade.

The Brewster administration is generally praised for its progressive initiatives and innovative new academic programs, in spite of the increasing burden it placed on the operating budget as a result. Brewster himself was considered friendly, energetic, accessible, and loyal to the faculty, staff, and students.

Relations with outspoken alumni were sometimes strained, especially throughout the 1960s, because of changes in student body make-up and a perceived new wave of liberalism dominating Yale. Still, most of the Brewster administration's new initiatives and philosophies have remained operationally active and influential within subsequent Yale presidencies.

Scope and Contents

These administrative records are broken down into the following chronological sets: Series I, 1941-1977 (bulk 1962-1970), Series II, 1962-1977 (bulk 1969-1975), and Series III, 1958-1977 (bulk 1970-1977). Since they were maintained in various separate file groupings by a number of presidential staff members and merged into three series after the fact, there is unavoidable overlap. The arrangement of series I and II combine subject and correspondence files within one alphabetical run for each series; the files in series III are arranged according to a classification system either alphabetically or chronologically listed thereunder. Because of overlap, the researcher should consult each series for all documentation on a particular subject. Annual President's Report drafts and proofs, requests, comments, and final type-set and published versions comprise Series V: Presidential Reports.

Presidential materials which address certain topics more specifically may be found in the following Manuscripts and Archives collections:

Collection Contents

Series I: Administrative Records, 1941-1977, bulk 1962–1970

These administrative records from the Office of the President, Yale University, combine subject and correspondence files into one alphabetical run. They primarily document the academic policies and programs proposed, developed, and revised during the first eight years of Kingman Brewster, Jr.'s, presidential administration. Most folders contain a variety of document types, including memoranda, publications, information and statistical packets, proposals, reports, meeting summaries, notes, and trip schedules. Subject files are arranged hierarchically under the title: general files labeled by date are listed first, followed by alphabetical files arranged thereunder. Extensively documented within these materials are matters relating to academic departments and professional schools, the daily operations of Yale offices and services, Yale building projects and facilities maintenance, athletics, specific campus issues and events, university development, research and college associations, foundations, Connecticut state government, United States governmental commissions and armed forces, New Haven land development, and the Vietnam Conflict. Specific areas of comprehensive documentation include Yale faculty files on appointment policy, salaries, chairmanships, tenure procedures, and the work of various committees; admissions files on policy, scholarships, committees, procedures, and office operations (undergraduate women at Yale are documented under Admissions, as well as under Coeducation); and materials on the activities of the alumni board, alumni association, and various Yale clubs throughout the United States (materials on alumni reunions appear under Class reunions).

Certain topics within this series are listed under general headings such as "Undergraduate," while others appear by themselves within the alphabetical run. Therefore, the researcher should explore various headings and word configurations to obtain all information within these records on a particular topic. As well, consult series II and III for additional information on any given subject or person.

The materials are partially restricted. Restrictions are indicated at the file level.

b. 656	Presentation by President Kingman Brewster to Trumbull College students regarding proposed plan to house incoming freshmen woman in Trumbull College 1 Audiotape Reel 1/4 inch audiotape (reel-to-reel). 2 recordings. Track B was recorded twice, with the second recording of a discussion of the demographics of Paramus county dubbed over and periodically interupting the original recording beginning 2 minutes, 30 seconds into the recording and lasting until 11 minutes into the recording. This audio recording documents 36 minutes of a four hour meeting and heated discussion between President Brewster and Trumbull College students. The recording begins in the middle of the meeting and ends abruptly before the meeting has completed. On the recording, in addition to President Brewster speaking, one student can be heard presenting a formal rebuttal to the proposal; Avi Soifer '69, Chair of the Coed Steering Committee. Recorded by Steve Bemis, Class of 1969. Original audiovisual materials, as well as preservation and duplicating masters, may not be played. Researchers must consult use copies, or if none exist must pay for a use copy, which is retained by the repository. Researchers wishing to obtain an additional copy of non-commercially produced items for their personal use should consult the ordering reproductions information on the Manuscripts and Archives web site. Series II: Administrative Records, 1962-1977, bulk 1969–1977

The records in this series are similar in content and arrangement to those in Series I. They combine subject and correspondence files into one alphabetical run and document, among other subjects, matters related to academic departments and professional schools, daily operations of Yale offices, alumni activities, admissions and coeducation, athletics, specific campus issues and events, research and college associations, foundations, New Haven city government, Yale buildings and grounds, United States governmental agencies, and the Vietnam Conflict. A variety of document types, including correspondence, published materials, memoranda, notes, information and statistics packets, and reports, also address new subjects included in this series, such as affirmative action at Yale, the Graduate-Professional Student Senate, Yale Summer school, the tuition postponement option, and the strikes of 1971 and 1974. Certain topics documented in series I and continued chronologically in this series may appear under slightly different headings or arrangement schemes. For instance, in this series, files on specific residential colleges are listed alphabetically under each college's name, although general residential college materials are filed under the heading Undergraduate Colleges, as they are in series I. These filing changes reflect shifts in records-keeping practice implemented by the president's staff in the early 1970s. The researcher, therefore, should explore a number of headings and word configurations to obtain all information within the series on a given topic. The researcher should also consult series I and III for similar records.

The materials are partially restricted. Restrictions are indicated at the file level.

Series III: Administrative Records, 1958-1977, bulk 1970–1977

This series is arranged into alphabetical subject headings and primarily documents the operations of Yale University during the second half of the Brewster presidential administration, 1970-1977. Although there is some chronological overlap with the materials included in series I and II, the records-keeping practice used to categorize these materials is substantially different. The files are arranged into alphabetical subject areas: Academic Units; Administration; Admissions; Affiliated Organizations; Art Gallery, Library, and Museums; Athletics; Awards - internal and outside; Budgets; Campaign for Yale; Chronological Mail File; Committees and Councils at Yale; Foundations, Funds, and Trusts; General Files; Government Files - Federal and State (Connecticut); Professional Organizations and Businesses; Professorships; Residential Colleges; Student Organizations; Trips; and Universities and Colleges, Other. Except for the Chronological Mail File and General Files, the materials listed under each subject heading are hierarchically arranged: general records, when they exist, appear first and are listed by date, followed by subject files arranged alphabetically. The folders themselves contain a variety of document types, including correspondence, published materials, memoranda, reports, proposals, meeting summaries, notes, and itineraries.

The Administration subject heading consists of organizational files on the Development office, the Legal Advisor, the Office of Institutional Relations and Alumni Programs, and on the offices of the president, provost, treasurer, and secretary. The subject of Affiliated Organizations documents those operations closely associated with Yale, such as the Yale Repertory Theater, the Yale Psychiatric Institute, Dwight Hall, Mory's Association, The Yale-New Haven Hospital and Medical Center, and the Yale University Press, as well as outside organizations, such as the Research Libraries Group (RLG), the National Humanities Institute, and the Urban Improvement Corps. The Chronological Mail File consists of photocopied presidential correspondence, including letter attachments such as policy memoranda, summaries, proposals, articles, and the like. Incoming and outgoing materials are separated into two sections and each folder is arranged in reverse chronological order. General Files consist of correspondence and attachments as well, with some duplication in the Chronological Mail File. Incoming and outgoing letters are filed together, however, and the folders themselves are arranged chronologically by year and alphabetically thereunder. From 1970 to 1973, the files are listed by fiscal year, with some overlap; from 1974 to 1977, due to a change in records-keeping practice, the files are arranged by calendar year and by fiscal year combined, having been merged from different locations within the president's office. Overall, there are times when correspondence from one year will have attached correspondence from a previous year, copies of which are not accounted for elsewhere, including in the Chronological Mail File. A researcher working through materials chronologically, therefore, should explore file dates before and after the time in question.

The style of records management which has determined the arrangement of this series requires the researcher to search under a number of headings for all materials related to a specific topic. For instance, materials on comprehensive academic departmental policies are most likely filed under Academic Units, whereas materials documenting the formulation, consideration, and implementation of those policies are more likely filed under Committees and Councils at Yale. The researcher should also consult series I and II for earlier and overlapping materials.

The materials are partially restricted. Restrictions are indicated at the file level.

Series V: Reports of the President, 1963/1964-1976/1977

Presidential annual report materials comprise this series, arranged by academic year and alphabetically thereunder. The files primarily consist of report drafts with editorial annotations by Brewster or various other solicited readers, final report typeset scripts and proofs, and correspondence requesting published reports or offering feedback. There is occasional overlap from one year to the next, due to correspondence or budget matters regarding report publication.

The materials are open for research.
