Biographical / Historical

Dwight Macdonald (1906-1992)

Dwight Macdonald was for almost fifty years a productive and influential critic of politics, society, and culture in the United States and abroad. He is especially well-known for his writing on film, mass culture, and political ideas, but few subjects of humanistic interest have altogether escaped his attention. At different times he wrote regularly for Fortune, Partisan Review, The New International, politics (which he also edited and published), The New Yorker, Encounter, and Esquire, and his articles appeared occasionally in dozens of other periodicals. Among his longer works are The Root Is Man, "Masscult and Midcult," several volumes of essays, studies of Henry Wallace and the Ford Foundation, editions of Edgar Allan Poe and Alexander Herzen, and an anthology of parodies. He was also an important member and critic of a number of political movements and organizations, ranging in time from the Socialist Workers Party in the late 1930s to the anti-war movement in the late 1960s. From 1948 onward, he also lectured and taught courses on film, mass culture, politics, and other subjects in colleges and universities.

An education at Phillips Exeter Academy and Yale (B.A., 1928) provided Macdonald with a strong background in classical literature and reinforced his tendency to rely on his own taste and knowledge as his final measures of value. This self-assurance and skepticism shaped both his early approach to radical politics and his later ventures in cultural criticism. Experiences at Yale, in particular, foreshadowed the characteristic Macdonald protest: in a 1925 letter to President James R. Angell, he argued against compulsory chapel on the ground that the sermons offended his intelligence.

In the 1930s, along with many other disenchanted American intellectuals, Dwight Macdonald read Marx and turned to communism. In 1934 he wrote that he believed it to be the "only way out of the mess our society is in. Whether it's a blind alley is another question but it's the only alley that has any chance of not turning out to be blind." But unlike the majority of those who took this path, he affiliated himself with the Trotskyists rather than the Communists. A leading intellectual in the Socialist Workers Party from 1939 to 1941, he left the Party in the later year because of its lack of internal democracy and intellectual freedom.

Macdonald argued with the Trotskyists over organization and not ideology, but by the time he published "The Root Is Man" in 1946, he had completed an ideological break as well. Applying a single measure to politics and culture, he criticized either when it offended his intellect or the principles of his conservatism. Later in the 1940s, when he reflected on his involvement with the Trotskyists, he described the experience with a metaphor that recalled Exeter and Yale: "It really is like the old school tie, this having once been part of the Bolshevist Movement, and no matter how much one's reason and ethical values tell you now otherwise, one still has a sense that one 'belongs to the club.'"

During the politics period (1944-1949), Macdonald made a transition from socialist politics and literary criticism to anarchism, pacifism, and a broader critique of American culture. This period prepared him for the articles he would write in the 1950s and 1960s for Esquire and The New Yorker essays that retained his earlier concern for social reform and human welfare but defined culture in more elitist terms. He saw the job of a critic as more than reviewing or providing a consumer report on culture. Rather, he would insist on principles and standards; he would evaluate according to his taste and knowledge. He would undertake to distinguish between true culture and the insidious pseudo-culture ("mid-cult") of the Book-of-the-Month Club, the Great Books, and The Saturday Review.

Macdonald carried on his defense of principles and morality in culture by insisting on standards of taste and usage in language. Believing that language determines and reflects the strength and level of culture, he sought a balance between style and content. If, as he wrote in 1960, "Great ideas can only be expressed in a great style,"* content and style might serve as mutual upholders of culture. Radical politics (content) and conservative culture (standards of style and taste) coexisted for him in the medium of language.

Macdonald's left-handed attack on American politics and his right-handed critique of American culture have earned him the reputation of being "against" everything and not "for" anything. By way of this distinction, he further aided the cause of precision in language in an indirect way. A new term, descriptive of his type of criticism, bears his name: macdonaldize, meaning to find fault, or carp.

Macdonald died on December 19, 1982, in New York City.

Scope and Contents

The Dwight Macdonald Papers consist of seventy-three feet of correspondence, manuscripts, notes, printed matter, photographs, and memorabilia extending mainly from 1920 to 1978. They constitute a remarkably large fraction of the biographically and historically important papers that can ever have passed through Macdonald's hands. Almost all major aspects of his personal and public life are well documented except that there are very few items related to his work on the editorial staffs of Fortune and Partisan Review. Many other prominent intellectuals are represented by rich and voluminous correspondence. The papers also contain valuable material for studies of these subjects among many others: Exeter and Yale in the 1920s; Communism and the Trotskyist movement in the 1930s and 1940s; little magazines in the same period; American assistance to refugees from Franco's Spain; international pacifist sentiment during and after World War II; the Congress for Cultural Freedom; opposition to the war in Vietnam; film criticism; and interpretation of mass culture.

The Dwight Macdonald Papers are arranged in six series:

I Correspondence
II Research and Writing
III Teaching and Lectures
IV Trotskyist Movement
V politics Magazine
VI Miscellany

Series I, Correspondence, has two sections: Family and General. The Family correspondence consists of letters that Macdonald exchanged with his close relations--principally his parents, brother, wives, and sons--and letters that they exchanged with other persons. Researchers seeking an extended private view of Macdonald's life should also examine his correspondence with Exeter classmate Dinsmore Wheeler in the General section.

The General section contains all non-family correspondence in the papers with these partial exceptions: routine editorial exchanges and reader response to books and articles (Series II); correspondence related to academic appointments (Series III); letters related to the Trotskyist movement (Series IV) and the editing and publication of politics (Series V); and miscellaneous correspondence connected with personal business and the literary executorship of the Delmore Schwartz estate (Series VI). The folder listing for this section has cross-references to incoming letters in the later series that have an interest independent of Macdonald's role in the activities documented in those series. Correspondence related to certain special subjects--"The Camacho Letter," "The Encounter Row," "The Franco Letter," "Mission to Moscow," and "The Nation Letter," among others--has been kept together as Macdonald left it. Persons whose letters are filed under these headings are listed under their own names with appropriate cross-references.

The correspondence in the General section has much to offer the historian or biographer whose interest is in American and European intellectual life between the 1920s and the 1970s. The letters are full of important ideas and observations, and there are many extended arguments between Macdonald and his correspondents that show them developing and refining their positions in the course of controversy.

It would require several pages to list all of Macdonald's correspondents who have contributed importantly to twentieth-century intellectual and cultural life, but these are some of the leading thinkers and writers with whom he has exchanged numerous or important letters: Daniel Aaron, Lionel Abel, James Agee, Sherwood Anderson, Hannah Arendt, W.H. Auden, Daniel Bell, Peter Blake, William F. Buckley, Jr., Nicola Chiaromonte, Helen Constas, Dorothy Day, John Dos Passos, F.W. Dupee, T.S. Eliot, James T. Farrell, Waldo Frank, Nathan Glazer, Paul Goodman, Esther Dette Hamill, Elizabeth Hardwick, Geoffrey T. Hellman, Will Herberg, Irving Howe, Jane Jacobs, John K. Jessup, Alfred Kazin, Irving Kristol, Melvin Lasky, Mary McCarthy, Norman Mailer, Ralph Manheim, George L.K. Morris, George Orwell, William Phillips, Ezra Pound, Philip Rahv, Kenneth Rexroth, David Riesman, Diego Rivera, Bertrand Russell, Delmore Schwartz, William Shawn, Stephen Spender, Carlo Tresca, Diana Trilling, Lionel Trilling, Leon Trotsky, Niccolo Tucci, Peter Viereck, Edmund Wilson, Richard Wollheim, and George Woodcock.

Macdonald's correspondence with many lesser-known individuals is also of considerable value. In his Trotskyist period he exchanged letters with Max Shachtman, James P. Cannon, and other members of the Socialist Workers Party. His pacifists stance in the politics period brought him in touch with GIs and civilians who shared his ideas. He heard about wartime Germany from Fritz T. Kaeser and Melvin Lasky and about postwar Germany and France from Emil Henk, Helmut Hirsch, and Mario Levi. His extensive correspondence with such European radicals as Victor Serge, Jean and Andrée Delecourt, and Jean Malaquais provides information about politics and culture in postwar Europe.

In his capacities as editor, critic, and friend, Macdonald received unpublished writings from many authors. These are among the most prominent writers who are represented in Series I by manuscripts as well as correspondence: James Agee, Peter Blake, Nicola Chiaromonte, Anton Ciliga, Eldridge Cleaver, Helen Constas, Jean and Andrée Delecourt, James T. Farrell, Ernst Federn, Hans Gerth, Morgan Gibson, Joseph Gould, Lawrence Grauman, Jr., Henry Hellman, Georges Henein, Sander Katz, Hans Kohn, Karl Korsch, Lucien Laurat, Eric Lee, Gershon Legman, Mario Levi, Robert Jay Lifton, John A. Lukacs, David McDowell, Norman Mailer, Ralph Manheim, Durham Miller, Sibyl Moholy-Nagy, Leo Moulin, A.J. Muste, Justin O'Brien, George Orwell, Henry M. Paechter, Kenneth Patchen, Dachine Rainer, John Crowe Ransom, Wilhelm Reich, Charles Rembar, Kenneth Rexroth, Diego Rivera, Ray McLeod Robinson, Selden Rodman, Maximilien Rubel, Derek S. Savage, Delmore Schwartz, Victor Serge, Wilfrid Sheed, Stephen Spender, Leon Trotsky, Niccolo Tucci, Peter Viereck, and John B. Wheelwright. Other manuscripts on political subjects are listed by author and title in Series IV and V.

Series II, Research and Writing, has four sections: Early Writings, Books and Pamphlets, Shorter Writings, and Subject File.

Early Writings consists mainly of notes, themes, and student publications, most of which Macdonald wrote at Exeter and Yale.

Books and Pamphlets and Shorter Writings consist of research material, notes, drafts, proofs, publications, editorial correspondence, reader response, and requests for reprint rights related to Macdonald's books, pamphlets, articles, and certain unpublished writings. Letters to the editor, both published and unpublished, have been filed in Series I, General, except when there were bulky notes, drafts, or research material. Other published and unpublished writings can be found in the other sections of this series and in Series III, IV, and V.

The Subject File consists of notes, research material, and drafts arranged by subject. The two largest groupings are research material and drafts related to Macdonald's unfinished book on United States Steel and the miscellaneous papers related to his writings on mass culture. The research material in this section includes important mimeographed and printed matter on these subjects among others: anarchism, pacifism, civil liberties, urban renewal in New York City, the war in Vietnam, and the New Left.

Series III, Teaching and Lectures, consists of notes, drafts, administrative records, correspondence, and student essays related to Macdonald's academic appointments and occasional lectures. Tapes of Macdonald's lectures at the University of Texas have been transferred to Historical Sound Recordings in Sterling Memorial Library. These are listed in an appendix.

Series IV, Trotskyist Movement, is a consolidation of much of the important political material in the papers. Among the major items are these: Macdonald's bibliography and notes on the movement, his writings for The New International, correspondence and mimeographed material documenting the split between the Socialist Workers Party and the Workers Party, and miscellaneous correspondence. Other important correspondence is filed under these names in Series I, General: Albert Goldman, Philip Gray, Freda Kirchwey, Felix Morrow, Max Shachtman, The Socialist Appeal, the Socialist Workers Party, and Leon Trotsky.

Series V, politics Magazine, consists of notes by Dwight Macdonald; published and unpublished manuscripts by Macdonald and others; correspondence with readers and contributors; proofs, dummies, and published copies of the magazine; financial records; and promotional matter. These papers are valuable for studying the business as well as the editorial aspect of publication; they provide much insight into the financial problems of a little magazine. Much of the correspondence with contributors and readers is in Series I, General, under these names among others: Lionel Abel, Bruno Bettelheim, Dorothy Brumm, Andrea Caffi, Nicola Chiaromonte, Lewis A. Coser, H.V. Crehan, Robert Dahl, Joel Dirlam, George P. Elliott, Jon Evans, Henry Geiger, Ethel Goldwater, Paul Goodman, Bertha Gruner, Zellig Harris, W.B. Hesseltine, Milton R. Konvitz, Karl Korsch, Melvin J. Lasky, Norman Matson, Judith Miller, C. Wright Mills, Norman Mini, George Orwell, William Petersan, Daniel Rosenblatt, Porter Sargent, Daniel Seligman, Victor Serge, Julian Symons, Niccolo Tucci, and George Woodcock.

Series VI, Miscellany, has six sections: Personal, Family, Photographs, Schwartz Estate, Legal and Financial, and Travel.

The Personal section consists of memorabilia, address and date books, clippings, and a few personal writings.

The Family section consists of miscellaneous papers created by or related to Macdonald's parents and children.

The Photographs section has snapshots and portraits of Dwight Macdonald, his family, and his friends.

The Schwartz Estate section consists of correspondence, notes, and drafts related to Macdonald's literary executorship of the Delmore Schwartz estate.

The Legal and Financial section consists of divorce agreements, wills and related correspondence, letters about the schooling of Michael and Nicholas G. Macdonald, and miscellaneous financial papers.

The Travel section consists of memorabilia related to Macdonald's travels, mainly in Western Europe, between 1933 and 1968.

Seven cartons of pamphlets, serials, newspapers, books, and government documents were separated from the papers for distribution to other parts of the Library's collections. Some of the pamphlets, mainly political publications from the 1930s and 1940s, have been incorporated in the Pamphlet Collection in this department. A list of selected titles is appended to this register. The serials, consisting mainly of political and literary magazines published in the 1930s and 1940s, included several copies of each of these titles: Chimera, Dialectics, East and West, Fact, Hound & Horn, International Review, Living Marxism, Modern Monthly, Pacifica, and Townsman. There were also copies of The Dial and The Little Review, published between 1923 and 1925, and of Eros and The Realist, published between 1961 and 1964, and single numbers of many other magazines. The newspapers consisted of American underground publications from the late 1960s and a file of the Indian paper Harijan for 1946 and 1947. The government documents were mainly federal publications on economic subjects.

The Dwight Macdonald Papers were purchased from Dwight Macdonald in 1975 and 1978.

Arrangement

Arranged in six series and two additions: I. Correspondence. II. Research and Writing. III. Teaching and Lectures. IV. Trotskyist Movement. V. politics Magazine. VI. Miscellany. 1984 July Addition. 1985 November Addition.

Collection Contents

Series I: Correspondence, 1864, 1888, 1912-1978

23 linear feet (62 boxes)

The principal correspondents in Family appear in modified generational order: Dwight Macdonald, Sr. (father); Alice Eliza Hedges Macdonald (mother); Hedges Macdonald, Sr. (brother); Hedges Macdonald, Jr. (nephew); Nancy Rodman Macdonald (first wife); Michael Dwight Macdonald (son); Nicholas Gardiner Macdonald (son); Elspeth Woodcock Macdonald (wife of Nicholas); Gloria Macdonald (second wife); Mary Day Lanier (stepdaughter); and Sabina Lanier (stepdaughter). The letters filed under these names were exchanged with Macdonald himself except where otherwise noted.

The arrangement of General is alphabetical, with unidentified letters (most of which are missing surnames) filed at the end of the section.

Series II: Research and Writing, 1919-1978

36 linear feet (77 boxes)

Early Writings, Books and Pamphlets, and Shorter Writings are arranged chronologically. The Subject File is arranged alphabetically. The folder headings in Books and Pamphlets and Shorter Writings note the presence of research material, notes, drafts, proofs, and reader response but do not mention such routine items as tear sheets, editorial correspondence, and requests for reprint rights.

The material in the Subject File was brought together by the archivist, but Macdonald's groupings at the folder level have usually been preserved, and his folder headings are presented as titles or subtitles in quotation marks. Closely related papers may appear under several headings e.g., "Draft resistance," "Pacifism," and "Vietnam."

Accession 1986-M-053: Additional Material, 1929-(1978-1982)-1984

7.75 linear feet (15 boxes)

The November 1985 addition (accession 86-M-53) consists of correspondence, manuscripts, notes, printed matter, photographs and tapes primarily from 1978 to 1982. Similar in arrangement to earlier accessions, there are five series: Correspondence, Research and Writing, Teaching and Lectures, Miscellany, and Photographs.

Series I, Correspondence, is comprised of three sections: Family, General and Condolences. Each section is arranged alphabetically by the last name of the correspondent. The Family correspondence consists of letters that Macdonald exchanged with his second wife, Gloria, and his brother, Hedges, as well as a few pieces of correspondence between Gloria and third parties.

The General section contains all of the addition's non-family correspondence, with the exception of correspondence on particular subjects which Macdonald had placed in his research files (Series II), correspondence related to academic appointments and public lectures (Series III), and routine royalty and reprint notifications (Series IV). There is much correspondence to Macdonald from other intellectuals. Correspondence and notes about Lillian Hellman's presence on the board of Spanish Refugee Aid have been filed under "Hellman affair" and kept in Macdonald's original ordering. They document the continued rifts in the intellectual community over international communism and domestic anti-communism. The correspondence with James Agee and Florida prisoner Willie Simmons is particularly interesting. Macdonald's exchanges with Agee demonstrate the maturation of each man's social and artistic thought. His correspondence with Simmons is a detailed example of Macdonald's efforts to put his political beliefs into practice.

The Condolences section contains letters of condolence sent to Gloria Macdonald after her husband's death. They document the depth and breadth of Macdonald's intellectual and personal networks. Many of the letters contain extensive personal and intellectual evaluations of Macdonald and his importance.

Series II, Research and Writing has three sections: Early Writings, Subject Files and Shorter Writings arranged alphabetically by the subject or title of each file. Early Writings consists of notes, manuscripts, and student publications from Macdonald's Yale years and the early 1930s. His undated marginal comments on his own 1929 article on film (folder 277) shed light on how Macdonald's conception of film and art changed over the decades.

The Subject Files comprise the largest part of this addition. They consist of notes, research materials, drafts, and occasional correspondence which document the span of Macdonald's intellectual interests and include some of the writings which he found useful in developing his own ideas. The largest and most useful files are those related to Edgar Allan Poe, general popular culture, and film actors and directors.

Shorter Writings consists of four documents. There is a 1968 fund-raising appeal for the protest group, Students for a Democratic Society; an essay about mass culture and heroes; a short note on Ernest Hemingway's career; and a review of several movies.

Series III, Teaching and Lectures consists of notes, lecture drafts, correspondence, and syllabi related to Macdonald's academic appointments and public lectures. Most of the series dates from the 1970s and has been arranged alphabetically by name of the sponsoring institution.

Series IV, Miscellany has four sections: Interviews, Legal and Financial, Personal, and Delmore Schwartz. The Interviews section contains three interviews with Macdonald which primarily concern his political thought and activities. Legal and Financial consists of miscellaneous financial papers, royalty statements, and banking records, and correspondence and legal documents relating to a dispute between the Macdonalds and some of their real estate tenants. The documents are arranged alphabetically by record type. The Personal section consists of Macdonald's notes to himself, short writings about his own dreams, and a copy of his birth certificate. They are arranged alphabetically by subject matter. The Delmore Schwartz section consists of writings about the poet Delmore Schwartz, and correspondence and royalty statements related to Macdonald's literary executorship of Schwartz's estate. Correspondence between Macdonald, Schwartz, and Schwartz's son, Kenneth, that Macdonald had filed with his other correspondence has been kept in the General section of Series I.

Series V, Photographs consists of mostly undated, miscellaneous black and white images, including some of Macdonald and Delmore Schwartz.
