Not that the story need be long, but it will take a long while to make it short. - Thoreau

In the beginning there was no plan -- no "plan" at all -- to build a collection of the writings of Walter Lippmann. In 1931 he was just the name of an author of a book, Public Opinion, which had been assigned as required reading by Lindsay Rogers, Professor of Political Science, to his students at Amherst College in 1925. I happened to be one of his students in my junior year.

The death of Dwight Whitney Morrow on October 5, 1931, changed all that. It was Lippmann's "Today and Tomorrow" column in the New York Herald Tribune, dated October 6, 1931, entitled, "Dwight Morrow," which caught my attention as a young telephone engineer working for the Bell System in Brooklyn, New York. Dwight Morrow was an Amherst man, Class of 1895, a classmate of Calvin Coolidge, and many of the Amherst students in the 1920s had met him. Elected a life trustee in 1916, he was lavish in devoting to Amherst the more precious resources of his energy and time, in addition to his own munificence. "It would require more composure than I can muster in the first shock of the news of Dwight Morrow's death to attempt an estimate of the man or a just tribute to his qualities," wrote his old friend Walter Lippmann. And the column the following day, "Dwight W. Morrow: A Tribute," moved me to clip both articles and file them in the top drawer of my desk for re-reading.

Lippmann was writing four "Today and Tomorrow" columns a week in the 1930s on important current subjects which soon interested millions of readers. It was his clarity and prose style, too, which caused me to "clip and reread" for the next few weeks. It was then that the idea of a collection of the "Today and Tomorrow" column came about.

It is just possible that a philosophic thought dropped one day in Professor Geoffrey (Jeff) Atkinson's French class around 1925 led me subconsciously to start the complete collection of the works of Walter Lippmann several years later. The thought was that "the best use of a life is to spend it on something which outlives it." Possible, but at that early stage, spending time on a stack of clippings would hardly justify the best use of a life. But toward the end of 1931 an office associate, Charles Peter Rarich, Lafayette '27, looking over the clippings one day, conceived the idea of indexing the "Today and Tomorrow" column to make the clippings more usable as to subject matter. It seemed a good idea, and while I clipped and pasted into scrapbooks, usually three months to a volume, Rarich indexed them. In order to make the column complete, copies back to the first one, September 8, 1931, were obtained from the back-number newspaper dealer down under the Times Building in Times Square. This arrangement continued for the first ten volumes, from September, 1931, through June, 1934, when Rarich married and found that he no longer had the time to spend on indexing, and I took it over to the final article 33 years later.

Amherst College entered the picture again in November, 1932, when Walter Lippmann was invited by his great friend Stanley King, President of Amherst, to deliver the Armistice Day address in College Hall on Friday, November 11th. Knowing this, and the fact that the Amherst-Williams Little Three football championship would be decided the following day, my wife Gladys and I decided to make a weekend of it, hear Lippmann and see what he looked like. We did this, and saw Faye Lippmann, too, as she was coming from the balcony with Mrs. King, but were unable to approach Walter Lippmann. The following afternoon at Pratt Field, however, the opportunity presented itself.

Seated at the top of the Amherst cheering section that Saturday, just below the press box, was a distinguished group including the Presidents of Amherst and Williams, Governor Ely of Massachusetts,--and Walter Lippmann. Gladys and I did not know this, of course, and wondered why there were so many state troopers in front of that section. Between the halves, seated in the end zone, Gladys said, "That looks like Walter Lippmann up there under the press box. Why don't you go over and see? Perhaps you could meet him." Over I strolled, recognized Lippmann, and impulsively started up through the cheering section. Stopped immediately by a trooper saying, "The Governor is there and you can't go up," the alternative to giving up on the idea was to walk past the last trooper, then make a dash through the student body to the press box, which I did. Arriving at the top, I stumbled and landed with both hands on Lippmann's shoulders. Not too startled, Lippmann said, "Hello." After introducing myself as an alumnus of Amherst, I told him I was working on a project which he might like to see. He replied, "Fine. Where do you work?" When told New York City, Lippmann replied, "So do I. Call my office. I'd be interested in seeing you."

The following Monday I telephoned Lippmann's office at the New York Herald Tribune and talked with his secretary, Miss Orrie Lashin, about an appointment. Skeptical at first, she said, "No. Everyone wants to see him and he's too busy," but added, "Well, perhaps you can--he was in Amherst over the weekend and it adds up. Just one moment," then, "He has fifteen minutes Thursday at 3:15 P.M. You may come in then."

Rarich and I were there ahead of time that Thursday and were ushered into the inner office. Lippmann was shown the three indexed volumes of the "Today and Tomorrow" column and called to Miss Lashin, "Come here and look at this. I always wanted you to do this but you said you were too busy." Lippmann said, "This indexing is invaluable to me and to Miss Lashin in answering telephone and mail requests for dates when I wrote on a particular subject. Would you make copies for me?" "Here are copies for you," was the reply. We left with inscribed copies of Lippmann's book, Interpretations: 1931-1932, which had just been published. A few days later Miss Lashin telephoned me at my office to express thanks for the indices and confided, "You know, the boss said that you would never keep up this indexing." It was in 1935 that I decided to spread into other fields of my hobby which I jokingly referred to as "Lippman(n)ia." It was not that my job in the Bell System was not interesting, or that I had time on my hands. Yet I found myself devoting some ten to twelve hours a week collecting, clipping, pasting, indexing, typing and binding the Lippmann columns. In the early days the telephone business was challenging indeed and the growth of the telephone art interesting. After all, I was present for forty years of the development of the telephone from the hand-cranked magneto instrument through ringdown to straightforward trunking, from manual to dial operation, and finally to ESS (Electronic Switching Systems). To this day the reason for the urge to build the Walter Lippmann collection escapes me.

My first goal was to obtain a list of magazine articles by and about Lippmann from the H. W. Wilson Guide to Periodical Literature, a formidable list going back to Everybody's magazine in 1910. Then in order to fill in the missing items in my collection, I spent many months during noon hours and weekends searching the back-number magazine stores on 4th Avenue between 8th and 14th streets in New York

City. In the end, all but three magazines were found, and photostats of Lippmann's articles in these three were obtained from the New York Public Library, thus making the collection complete.

I then decided to expand the collection to include copies of each of Lippmann's books, including those which he prefaced or edited. Eventually all were found, back to the first, A Preface to Politics, and Poems of Paul Mariett (1913). To round out the book section of the collection, it was only natural to search out books prominently mentioning Lippmann, and this section alone contains over 300 volumes today.

It was in 1935, too, that Walter Lippmann became interested in my hobby and began to send me material which otherwise would not have been obtainable. For example, his secretary sent a note: "Mr. Lippmann thought you'd like to have this," a pamphlet entitled, "Harvard Dinner, 1910," with his speech at the 25th reunion in 1935. His interest developed into friendly co-operation over the years and, of course, resulted in a collection far more complete than would have been possible otherwise. I reciprocated with the indexing of the "Today and Tomorrow" column, consolidating the four quarterly indices into a yearly index and, in 1937, consolidating 1931 through 1936 into one massive index.

It was around 1935, also, that I became concerned that Lippmann's manuscripts of his articles, books and addresses might be handled carelessly in his office, and took steps to preserve as many as possible. My plan was to notify his secretary each month as to the particular manuscripts which should be preserved from the previous month, and these were sent to me regularly, the others burned in a stove which was in the basement of Lippmann's residence. This plan worked well throughout the rest of his career.

Newspaper clippings concerning Lippmann began to pile up in the 1930s, and in 1938 a copy of every news item appearing in the New York Times was secured back to the earliest item (1915). I was able to check for completeness by using the Times Index. This was accomplished with the financial assistance of Lippmann ($39.48). It should be noted here that my hobby was not an expensive one over the years in terms of money--perhaps less than one hundred dollars a year. Lippmann had urged a policy "to do now what you would have to delay doing because of expense," but very few bills were ever sent to him for payment, nor did I make any "demands" or try to see him too often. The collection was built as far as possible without his involvement. An example of this independence occurred around 1940, after he had again suggested that I go on his payroll because of the indexing, etc., saying, "You don't get something for nothing in this world." Again refusing and being asked for the reason, I explained, "Because then you can tell me how to proceed, and it's my hobby." Lippmann commented that he had other friends who were collectors and he did not understand any of them.

Over the years only one suggested expense for his consideration was not found acceptable. When a magazine was located which had an article by or about Lippmann, I preserved the complete magazine rather than removing the article. This was particularly true of magazines published prior to 1930, and with few exceptions they are in the collection today. The proposal was that each magazine be bound for preservation at a cost of one dollar each. Lippmann wrote to James T. Babb, Yale University Librarian at the time, and asked for his opinion-of the idea. He also wrote his friend, Wilmarth S. (Lefty) Lewis, who replied that collectors go overboard sometimes with their collections and have a way of "opening other delightful vistas of expenditure," and urged a veto. Babb agreed with Lewis and the idea was dropped.

It was in March, 1938, just about a week before his marriage to Helen Byrne (Armstrong), that Lippmann telephoned and said he would like to see the collection in my apartment in Brooklyn. He asked me to meet him at his residence, 245 East 61st Street, New York City, and drive with him to show him the way. We met, picked up Helen at her apartment and proceeded to Brooklyn, Lippmann driving and Helen criticizing his failures to observe the rules of the road such as red lights. At the apartment he went through the collection, such as it was in 1938, without comment, then said, "I am glad you have this in your house; if it were in mine, I believe I would feel like jumping out of the window every time I looked at it."

As the years went by, there would be a reference to something of Lippmann's which required his co-operation in tracking it down, and this was done usually through one of his secretaries. An example was an out-of-print League of Free Nations Association pamphlet dated 1919 which contained a speech by Lippmann on "The Fourteen Points and the League of Nations." There was a copy in his office which was turned over promptly. Another example was Carl Sandburg's book, The Chicago Race Riots, for which Lippmann had written the preface. Sandburg's manager, to whom I wrote for a copy, was unable to furnish one but gave Sandburg's home address, adding that there would probably be no reply to a letter because Sandburg did not open his mail. There was a copy in Lippmann's library which he gladly gave to the collection.

As the collection grew and Lippmann recognized my increasing knowledge of the past events of his life, he began to refer correspondence dealing with his past to me for reply. Usually he wrote the inquirer, "I refer you to Robert O. Anthony (address), a friend of mine who for some strange reason is collecting all my works. He can probably help you." This, of course, added a new dimension to the project.

On May 18, 1940, the birth of our son Bob was one of the events of the 1940s which may be of interest in this chronicle. The following July, in a letter to Lippmann's secretary on another matter, mention of the birth was made, including the chosen name. Lippmann was in Chicago attending the Democratic National Convention when a telegram from his secretary advised him of the news. Shortly thereafter a silver Paul Revere drinking mug arrived from the Marshall Field Company inscribed, "Robert Williams Anthony from Walter Lippmann," and is a prized possession of the young man today.

At the age of two or three, the young man became a problem as far as the collection was concerned. It was housed in book cases on two sides of his bedroom, and he was forever monkeying around in the shelves and handling the items carelessly. It became necessary to erect a picket fence three feet high, painted white to improve the decor, diagonally across the bedroom to separate him from the collection. When asked later in life whether the picket fence had any effect on his personality, his mumbled reply was generally unintelligible to his father.

The other event, in 1946, was the moving of the collection to New Haven, a gift by me to the Yale University Library. It supplemented the gift by Walter Lippmann of his personal papers. Details of the gift were announced in the Yale University Library Gazette, October, 1947.

As time went on, Lippmann occasionally asked for help in locating an out-of-print book he wanted for his library. In most cases the search was successful. Included were requests for the three-volume von Clausewitz On War, Jeremy Bentham's Book of Fallacies, which I located in England, and three books by Liddell Hart.

I am well aware that the building of the Walter Lippmann collection over the past 46 years, and association with a man who lived as long and became as famous as Walter Lippmann, changed my life considerably. For one thing, it culminated in the conferring of an honorary degree of LITT.D. from my Alma Mater on June 6, 1974, in part for the work on the Walter Lippmann Collection and Papers at Yale. Through Lippmann there has been correspondence and meetings with many interesting people. A case in point was my contact with Admiral Richard Evelyn Byrd in 1941. In a letter to his friend Lippmann, dated July 17, 1941, Byrd wrote: "I am working on national unity and am anxious to get your ideas. Do you have the articles you have written on that subject during the past two years?" Lippmann replied, "I do not have these articles, but a friend of mine in New York has a collection of them, and I'll write him to see if I can persuade him to lend them to you. His name is Robert O. Anthony, 283 Cumberland Street, Brooklyn, New York."

Lippmann then wrote: "Dear Bob: Here is a letter from Admiral Byrd, with a copy of my reply. Do you think you could lend the newspaper articles and perhaps the Life magazine article to the Admiral? But if you want them back, you had better make very definite arrangements about getting them back." The next day a letter from Byrd arrived, a meeting was arranged at the New Yorker Hotel, the material was delivered personally to the Admiral and arrangements made for their return. Byrd used the material as the basis for his speeches on national unity throughout the United States.

And finally, over the same long period of 46 years, my greatest awareness has been of the understanding and full support of my helpmeet, Gladys. We were married on Easter Monday, April 21, 1930, about a year and a half before I started my hobby, and often during those years Gladys mused as to whether Bob would be buried with her or with Walter Lippmann.

Although she did not attempt to influence any decisions as far as the collection was concerned, neither did she remain aloof. She had, of course, met the Lippmanns. In 1968, when they had moved back to New York City from Washington, D. C., Lippmann asked her to catalog the 1,500 books he had taken with him, and Gladys spent a few days at his new apartment, 1021 Park Avenue, assisting his secretaries with this work.

Lippmann's library in Washington contained some 6,500 volumes, but his New York apartment could accommodate only 1,500. He was prevailed upon by me to give the remaining 5,000 volumes to the public library in Centerville, Cape Cod, Massachusetts, where I happened to be president. The story of this gift to Centerville has been told in Jerome Beatty's column, Trade Winds, in the Saturday Review of Literature, October 25, 1969. At Lippmann's death on December 14, 1974, the 1,500 books in his apartment were added to the Walter Lippmann Reference Room in Centerville.

Gladys' sense of humor, too, kept the work of building the collection in perspective. On several occasions her husband found a tidbit in his study, surreptitiously placed on his desk when he was away. Two are reproduced on the following page [This references photocopies of cartoons by James Thurber and George Price]. More than once I have had occasion to say, "Many women are valiant, but Gladdie surpasses them all."

Biographical / Historical

The death of Walter Lippmann on December 14, 1974, at age eighty-five, completed the career of one of the most distinguished journalists of this century. A writer and political analyst, he was for sixty years the preeminent voice of reason in American journalism. It was an extraordinary career as a political philosopher; "...the lodestar for the ablest journalists of his time, the first political columnist in the modern sense, and he had no peer," said Louis M. Lyons over Boston's public television station WGBH. His friend Marquis Childs wrote, "It is safe to say that no other journalist, author, philosopher, has in this century been so often quoted. Genius may be the work for it, but it is more than that. His scrupulous dedication to his craft, the care with which he met thousands of deadlines, is a lesson which strikes home today."

Lippmann's career passed through a number of phases before he discovered his bent as author, editor and journalist. As an undergraduate at Harvard, for example, he cultivated esthetic tastes, taught a course in fine arts at the Cambridge Social Union, and fancied a future as an American Ruskin. And as a volunteer to help the victims of the great Chelsea conflagration, he discovered the social problems of poverty, bad housing and general evidence of want, founded the Harvard Socialist Club and became a reformer of the roots of evil. But for this he might have been tempted toward scholarly paths, for his brilliance at Harvard drew the attention of his teachers, William James and Graham Wallas among others, and he was selected as an assistant to George Santayana to teach a course in philosophy during his final year.

Lippmann's journalistic career had three main phases. The first and the briefest and least significant-- was as one of the editors of the New Republic from 1914 to 1921. The nine years on the New York World (1922-1931) were far more important. There he came under the influence of Frank I. Cobb an editor with a strong idealism, a shrewd practical judgment, and a keen instinct for American traditions and folkways. When Cobb died in the fall of 1923, Lippmann took charge of one of the three or four most powerful dailies in the country. In these nine years on a fighting party newspaper, Lippmann learned to interpret the opinion of Americans and to guide it.

In 1931 came the beginning of the third, longest and most important phase of his career as a publicist with his "Today and Tomorrow" column syndicated by the New York Herald Tribune. On the New Republic he spoke to the intelligentsia and on the World he spoke to a metropolitan audience. Now he spoke to the whole country in over 200 newspapers reaching perhaps ten million readers. The secret of his ability to carry his vigorous opinions into widely different newspapers lay in his expert information, his reasonableness of temper, his complete honesty and his profound attachment to the principles of liberty. His independence was unquestioned perhaps because, as someone put it, "He addressed himself to possibilities, not imaginings."

The life of Walter Lippmann has been the subject of a number of books and magazine articles, and it seems unnecessary to include a biographical sketch here. The researcher is, however, directed to the following sources:

Scope and Contents

All known published writings by Walter Lippmann have been brought together in this collection. Included are whole books, essays in books, magazine and newspaper articles and addresses. A significant portion of the collection is devoted as well to works about Lippmann, ranging from newspaper clippings to essays, dissertations and books. In addition to written work, the collection includes published photographs, cartoons and other pictures of Lippmann. Correspondence with Lippmann and others relating to the collection (1933-1978) occupies nearly three linear feet.

Arrangement

The collection is arranged in seven series: Series I. Magazines, 1903-1977. Series II. Newspapers, 1909-1969. Series III. Bulletins, pamphlets and miscellaneous, 1901-1976. Series IV. Newspaper and magazine clippings and photostats, 1908-1975. Series V. Dissertations, essays, theses, and study groups, 1938-1974. Series VI. Books, 1910-1977. Series VII. Correspondence relating to collection, 1933-1978.

Collection Contents

Series I: Magazines, 1903-1977

One of the largest series in the Robert O. Anthony Collection of Walter Lippmann is Series I, Magazines, consisting of eight sections. There are over 1,000 magazines with articles by, or relating to, Walter Lippmann from 1903 to 1977. These articles appeared in over 400 publications, and in many cases prior to 1930 the entire magazine has been preserved. More than one-third of the articles—some 450—were written by Lippmann for about fifty different magazines. It is interesting that the earliest was an editorial on the subject of competition for editorship which appeared in the February, 1903, issue of Record, a student publication of Sachs Collegiate Institute when Lippmann was only thirteen years old.

Notable in Series I are fifty-one bound volumes of the New Republic from the first issue on November 7, 1914, when Lippmann was one of the six editors through February 12, 1930. These contain eighty-five articles with his by-line, and countless others which are anonymous. It is notable because, as Gilbert A. Harrison states in the foreword to the book, Early Writings, which he edited and published in 1970, "All the early New Republic files had mysteriously disappeared." The volumes at Yale may be one of the few sets extant. In a letter to Anthony, dated May 6, 1937, Lippmann wrote: "I own complete bound files of the New Republic, and you might well consider them as part of your collection. My articles in the New Republic are not all identified, and some day when I can find the time, I mean to go through them and mark those that I can recognize." Unfortunately, he never found time to do this. Mr. Harrison, again in the foreword to his book, states: "Fortunately, Mr. Lippmann had kept most of his original manuscripts and deposited them at Yale University. By matching manuscripts against copies of the New Republic (at Yale), the authorship of many unidentified articles were fixed."

Included also in Series I are 45 articles for Vanity Fair from 1920 to 1934 and 118 articles for Newsweek from 1944 to 1971. Of interest is the fact that the "Today and Tomorrow" format made famous through his newspaper column in the New York Herald Tribune from 1931 to 1962, and in the Washington Post from 1963 to 1967, was first used by Lippmann in a series of articles for the Metropolitan magazine in 1915.

As of this writing, some 140 articles about Lippmann have appeared in over seventy different magazines, the earliest by Alexander Harvey in Bang magazine, December 27, 1915. Included are pieces by Corliss Lamont, Amos Pinchot, Harrison Reeves and Oswald Garrison Villard in the late 1930s, Allan Nevins in the 1940s, Hans Eulau, Clinton Rossiter and Richard H. Rovere in the 1950s, Henry Brandon in the 1960s, and Marquis W. Childs, Gilbert A. Harrison, Louis M. Lyons, Richard H. Rovere, Harrison E. Salisbury and Ronald Steel in the 1970s.

Reviews of Lippmann's twenty-seven books, some 230 in number, beginning in 1913 with the publication of his first book, A Preface to Politics, will be found in 125 different magazines in the fourth section of the series. These reviews are arranged by title of the magazine in which they appeared. Noteworthy is a review by Theodore Roosevelt of Lippmann's second book, Drift and Mastery in Outlook magazine for November 18, 1914. Some of the other reviewers are Sir Norman Angell, Newton D. Baker, Pearl S. Buck, Henry S. Canby, Norman Cousins, Elmer Davis, John Dewey, William O. Douglas, Max Eastman, Thomas K. Finletter, Rupert Hughes, Harold J. Laski, Archibald MacLeish, Henry L. Menoken, James Reston, Eugene V. Rostow, George Santayana, Simeon D. Strunsky, Louis Untermeyer, William A. White, Edmund Wilson and Alexander Woollcott.

Almost 200 portraits, photographs, caricatures and cartoons of Walter Lippmann have appeared in some seventy-five different magazines of a period of sixty years, and make up an extensive section. About 160 photographs are by noted photographers including Bachrach, Karsch, Leavitt, McAvoy, Muray and Steichen. The earliest show Lippmann as a member of the football and hockey teams at Sachs Collegiate Institute in 1904. There are ten caricatures including those by Alain, Auerbach-Levy, Berger, Dunn, Ford and Morin. Cartoons, nine in number, include those by Barlow, Feiffer and Thurber. Portraits and drawings, fourteen in number, complete this section and include artists Baker, Garfield, Pierotti and Rafael. The bookplate for the Walter Lippmann Collection was reproduced from the Garfield drawing which appeared on the front cover of the Saturday Review of Literature for July 8, 1944.

The section on addresses by Lippmann contains almost seventy published in forty different magazines. The addresses are arranged by title of the magazine in which the address appeared. The first address was delivered on October 23, 1925, before the Indiana State Teachers Association in Indianapolis on the subject, "Shall Teaching Be Guided by Truth or by Majorities?" Included are Phi Beta Kappa addresses at Columbia, Harvard, the University of Pennsylvania and at William and Mary, commencement addresses at Boston University, Carnegie Institute of Technology, Drake, Radcliffe, Smith, Union, the University of Michigan and the University of Rochester, and radio addresses over NBC and WEA.

Among the lectures are the Charles R. Walgreen Foundation lecture at the University of Chicago (1939), the lectures at Oxford and Cambridge, England (1952), and the Gideon D. Seymour lecture at the University of Minnesota (1957). Of particular importance are Lippmann's addresses before the National Press Club, Washington D.C., on his seventieth birthday in 1959, and the International Press Institute, London, and the United Nations in New York, both in 1965.

Lippmann's noted "Today and Tomorrow" column was syndicated by the New York Herald Tribune from September 8, 1931, to December 31, 1962, and by the Washington Post from January 1, 1963, to the final article on May 25, 1967. A great many of the articles were reprinted in publications throughout the world. No attempt was made, however, to include in the collection cases where the article was simply reprinted without comment.

The section on reprinted, abridged and reviewed "Today and Tomorrow" articles, therefore contains only forty-five appearing in twenty-seven different magazines for the period 1935 to 1967. The first is a review of "The Defeat of the World Court," published February 2, 1935, which appeared in the Texas Weekly for February 9, 1925, entitled, "Mr. Lippmann's Fallacies."

The miscellaneous section in this series contains approximately 150 items concerning Lippmann in about seventy-five different magazines from 1903 to 1977. It comprises a miscellany which did not fit into the other sections. The earliest is an item in the Red and Blue, a student publication at Sachs Collegiate Institute in May, 1903, announcing that Lippmann had been awarded the Arnold B. Horwitz Prize "for faithful devotion to school duties and for general excellence." The prize was a ten-volume set of John Fiske's American History. Included are biographical sketches, TV appearances, announcement of awards, the conferring of three of Lippmann's twenty-two honorary degrees, review of the books Walter Lippmann and His Times and Conversations with Walter Lippmann, and several items in connection with the New York World newspaper and the Robert O. Anthony Collection of Walter Lippmann.

Series I is available on microfilm. Patrons must use FILM HM 39 instead of the originals.

Series I is divided into eight sections: Articles by Walter Lippmann; Reprinted and reviewed articles by Walter Lippmann; Articles about Walter Lippmann; Reviews of Walter Lippmann's books; Portraits, photographs, caricatures and cartoons of Walter Lippmann; Addresses by Walter Lippmann; Reprinted, abridged and reviewed "Today and Tomorrow" articles; Miscellaneous.

The articles in each of the eight sections are arranged alphabetically by the title of the magazine in which the article appeared. Articles published in the same magazine are arranged chronologically.

Series II: Newspapers, 1909-1969

Walter Lippmann's career as a journalist had a far-reaching influence in the shaping of American opinion and public policy over more than a half-century. Almost single-handedly he raised the standards of journalistic commentary in this country. Series, II, Newspapers, is therefore an important part of the Robert O. Anthony Collection. It is an extensive series in three major sections.

The first section contains over 2,500 editorials which he wrote for the New York World from January, 1922, through February, 1931, and which are filed in eighteen folios. The folios for the first two years, 1922 and 1923, when he was an editorial writer assisting Frank I. Cobb, contain Lippmann's editorials clipped from the editorial pages. The other sixteen folios for the years 1924 through February, 1931, when Lippmann became editorial-page editor, contain the complete editorial pages, with each editorial in addition to Lippmann's identified as to authorship, perhaps the only such archive in existence today.

The second section is a complete file of Lippmann's celebrated "Today and Tomorrow" column syndicated by the New York Herald Tribune (1931-1962) and the Washington Post (1963-1967 May 25). Approximately 4,200 in number, these articles are filed in forty-nine binders (eleven archival boxes), with the date of publication indicated. In addition, each article has been indexed on a yearly basis as to subject matter.

The third and final section of Series II is composed of over fifty articles by Lippmann exclusive of the New York World editorials and the "Today and Tomorrow" column. Of particular interest are his articles for the Boston Common in 1910, a weekly Boston newspaper edited by Charles Zueblin and published by Lippmann's future father-in-law, Ralph Albertson, and a tribute to Charles Townsend Copeland published in the Harvard Crimson on April 27, 1935, in honor of Mr. Copeland's seventy-fifth birthday.

Other articles in this section appeared over the years in several newspapers such as the New York Call, the New York Times, the Providence Journal and the Washington Post, as well as two feature articles for the New York Herald Tribune when he was also writing his regular column. During the period March, 1919, to June, 1920, Lippmann wrote approximately eighty-five articles for the Manchester Guardian. He was the first American correspondent to write for the Guardian. He worked for C.P. Scott, a great journalist considered the conscience of England in his time. The articles are in manuscript form and will be found in Manuscript Group Number 326, the Walter Lippmann Papers, box 214, folder 234.

Series II is available on microfilm. Patrons must use FILM HM 39 instead of the originals.

Series II is divided into three sections: New York World editorials; "Today and Tomorrow" articles; other articles.

The New York World editorials and the "Today and Tomorrow" articles are arranged chronologically. Other articles are arranged alphabetically by the title of the newspaper in which the article appeared. Articles published in the same newspaper are arranged chronologically.

Series III: Bulletins, pamphlets and miscellaneous, 1901-1976

Series III, Bulletins, Pamphlets, and Miscellaneous, is divided into the same eight sections as Series I, Magazines. This material covers the period 1901 (with his first essay as a student, age 12, at Sachs Collegiate Institute) to 1976.

His first essay, dated September 30, 1901, was entitled, "Life in England during the Fourteenth Century," and included paragraphs such as "The English people generally arose with the sun; a person found in his bed at six o'clock was ridiculed. Before dinner they washed their hands, used spoons instead of forks, and ate with their fingers." Other essays by Lippmann during this early period dealt with topics such as definitions, criticism, similes, sentences, metaphors and choice of words. Lippmann received a grade of B+ for his first essay, not an unusual mark for a young man who earned A's and B's in all subjects. He also earned, or at any rate received, a "shiner," a black eye from one of his classmates for always being at the top in his grades.

The section for Portraits, Photographs, Caricatures and Cartoons contains about twenty-five miscellaneous photographs of Lippmann and one caricature. Two of the photographs were used as promotional pieces for two of his books. Others picture him at functions such as a book and author luncheon in 1945 and at meetings where he was the speaker. Included is a photograph of Lippmann in a top hat with the other Harvard Overseers in 1936.

Forty-five addresses make up an important section in Series III and are arranged primarily by the title of the bulletin or pamphlet in which the address appeared. The earliest, on the subject of American foreign policy, was delivered before the New York City Club on January 14, 1916. Also included is the address before the League of Free Nations Association on April 5, 1919, on the subject, "The Fourteen Points and the League of Nations," and notable addresses at Amherst College, John Hopkins University, the University of California and the University of the State of New York. Other addresses include memorial addresses for Newton D. Baker, Marshall Foch and George Washington. Five Harvard Club and three Harvard Class of 1910 addresses are also included as well as three at the Washington Press Club. Of interest is the Annual Literary Address on Commencement Day at Wake Forest College, at which time Lippmann received the first of his twenty-two honorary degrees.

The final section in Series III contains information on Lippmann's early days at Sachs Collegiate Institute (1901-1906) and his undergraduate days at Harvard (1907-1910), including a program listing him as a teacher of an evening class in fine arts for the Cambridge Social Union in 1908. Also in this section are the Harvard College Rank Lists and Winners of Academic Distinctions, Lippmann's examination papers as a student in Philosophy B, notebooks for courses in philosophy, history and French, and the examination papers of his students in Philosophy B, a class which he taught in 1910 as an assistant to George Santayana.

Included also are the CBS reports covering Lippmann's television appearances during the years 1960 to 1965, and three publications describing the gift of the Robert O. Anthony Collection of Walter Lippmann to the Yale University Library.

Series III is available on microfilm. Patrons must use FILM HM 39 instead of the originals.

Series III is divided into eight sections: Articles by Walter Lippmann; Reprinted, abridged and reviewed articles by Walter Lippmann; Articles about Walter Lippmann; Reviews of Walter Lippmann's books; Portraits, photographs, caricatures and cartoons of Walter Lippmann; Addresses by Walter Lippmann; Reprinted, abridged and reviewed "Today and Tomorrow" articles; Miscellaneous.

The articles in each of the eight sections are arranged alphabetically by the title of the bulletin or pamphlet in which the article appeared. Articles published in the same bulletin or pamphlet are arranged chorologically.

Series IV: Newspaper and magazine clippings and photostats, 1908-1975

Series IV consists of two sections, 1) newspaper and magazine clippings relating to Walter Lippmann, and 2) clippings reviewing his books. It also contains one folder of clippings relating to Helen Lippmann.

The clippings relating to Lippmann, particularly press coverage of his activities, start in 1908. Included is a copy of every news items about him appearing in the New York Times during the period 1915-1938. The list of New York Times items, seventy-seven in number, was obtained from the Times Index.

The last archival box in the series contains clippings reviewing ten of Lippmann's books. The binder holds the clippings which reviewed his book, A Preface to Morals, and is voluminous.

Series V: Dissertations, essays, theses, and study groups, 1938-1974

Walter Lippmann's position on public issues, particularly his political thought in the field of American foreign policy, has been the subject of dissertations, essays, and themes for more than a score of scholars, mostly in the 1950s and 1960s. In addition, study groups and seminars, notably the four sessions presided over by Ronald Steel for the Lehrman Institute in New York in 1973 and 1974, have studied Lippmann's role in influencing public opinion and foreign affairs.

Series V is divided into four sections: Dissertations, Essays, Theses, and Study groups. In eleven cases where treatises have been microfilmed, a microfilm citation has been provided for the convenience of the researchers.

Series VI: Books, 1910-1977

Almost 600 books make up Series VI. They include books by and about Lippmann, foreign editions, books containing his articles and addresses, and books which predominately mention him.

There are about fifty American editions of the twenty-seven books he wrote, starting with his first, A Preface to Politics, in 1913. Of the twenty-seven books, eight contain reprinted materials from his "Today and Tomorrow" column and magazine articles, and four are reprinted addresses.

Over fifty foreign editions of fifteen of his books, published in more than twenty-three countries, are included in this series. The countries include Great Britain, France, the Netherlands, Germany, Spain and Switzerland; Norway, Sweden, Denmark, Bulgaria, Czechoslovakia, Hungary and Yugoslavia; China, Japan and Korea; Mexico, Argentina, Brazil and Honduras; Egypt, Iran and Syria; and Australia.

Lippmann edited, or wrote prefaces and introductions for, fifteen books, notably the introductions to Carl Sandburg's Chicago Race Riots and Woodrow Wilson's Congressional Government, a preface for Adlai Stevenson's Public Years, and a foreword to Fulbright of Arkansas. He also edited A Modern Reader with Allan Nevins, as well as The Poems of Paul Marriett and U.S. in World Affairs: 1933.

There are fifteen books about Lippmann, including the first biography by David E. Weingast (1949) and Walter Lippmann and His Times by Marquis W. Childs and James B. Reston, which was a tribute to Lippmann on his seventieth birthday. Several of the books about Lippmann are doctoral dissertations, and in four cases one chapter only is about him.

A large section, over 100 books, contains reprinted articles and addresses. Included are his New York Herald Tribune Forum addresses during the period 1932-1952, The Essential Lippmann by Clinton Rossiter and James Lare, and Gilbert A. Harrison's two books, Early Writings and Public Persona.

The largest section, containing over 300 books prominently mentioning Walter Lippmann, may be of particular interest to researchers because of the many references in the indices giving information about Lippmann not found elsewhere. The earliest is the Harvard Class Album for 1910. Captain Heber Blankenhorn's book, Adventures in Propaganda (1919), tells about Lippmann's work as a Captain in military intelligence in World War I, and At the Paris Peace Conference by James T. Shotwell has references to him as a member of the American Commission to Negotiate Peace.

Of particular importance are the autobiographies, biographies and memoirs of a great many of Lippmann's associates too numerous to mention here, as well as books about people and subjects very familiar to him. There are also several books on the New York World newspaper and the New Republic magazine.

The following items have been removed from the collection: Cary, Francine Curro, Influence of War on Walter Lippmann, 1914-1944, 1967; Wellborn, Charles T., Twentieth-century Pilgrimage: Walter Lippmann and the Public Philosophy, 1969; Lerner, Ralph and Gerald Stouzh, eds., Readings in American Foreign Policy, 1959; Lash, Joseph P., Dag Hammarskjold, 1964; Woodlock, Thomas P., Thinking It Over, 1947.

Series VI is divided into six sections: Books by Walter Lippmann; Foreign editions of books by Walter Lippmann; Books prefaced or edited by Walter Lippmann; Books about Walker Lippmann; Articles and addresses by Walter Lippmann; Books mentioning Walter Lippmann. Books are listed alphabetically by title within each category.

Series VII: Correspondence relating to collection, 1933-1978

Although correspondence relating to the Collection starts in the early 1930s, the announcement by Yale of the gift of the Robert O. Anthony Collection of Walter Lippmann to the University Library in 1946 increased considerably the interest in the material on the part of Lippmann's friends, journalists, scholars, and others. During a period of more than forty years, Anthony has corresponded with almost 300 individuals.

In several instances scholarly works have been published as a direct result of access to the collected material, notably books and feature articles. Even before 1946, when the collection was housed in Anthony's apartment in Brooklyn, New York, Norman Cousins, David Weingast, and others, including Walter Lippmann in 1938, visited or worked with the material. David Weingast's excellent book, Walter Lippmann: A Study in Personal Journalism, with an introduction by Harold L. Ickes, was researched and partially written in Anthony's apartment.

Correspondence with May Wallas, daughter of Lippmann's close friend Graham Wallas, led to securing for the collection copies of correspondence between the two men which was in her possession in England. Likewise, the extensive correspondence between Lippmann and Bernard Berenson was augmented by copies of letters in Berenson's villa "I Tatti" in Florence, Italy.

Series VII includes correspondence between Anthony and Lippmann, starting in 1933, on matters pertaining to the collection. Recognizing early the preoccupation of Lippmann with public affairs, his writing, his speaking engagements and his trips abroad and at home, Anthony usually corresponded with one of Lippmann's secretaries in order to collect materials, ascertain dates, forward the "Today and Tomorrow" indices, etc.

Correspondence with Yale University, starting in 1941, in connection with the gift by Anthony of his collection (MS Group No. 766), as well as Lippmann's gift of his personal papers (MS Group No. 326), is contained in the final archival box.

Series VII is divided into three sections: General correspondence; Correspondence with Walter Lippmann; Correspondence with Yale University.

Series VII consists of three archival boxes of correspondence between Anthony and almost 300 individuals, starting in the early 1930s, two archival boxes of correspondence between Anthony and Walter Lippmann, starting in 1933, and one archival box of correspondence between Lippmann and Anthony with Yale University starting in 1941.

General correspondence is filed alphabetically by name of correspondent. Correspondence in the second and third sections is filed chronologically.
