James Montgomery (1771-1854)

James Montgomery was an English author, editor, and resident of Sheffield, England.

Scope and Contents

The James Montgomery Collection primarily contains letters written by him to various friends, colleagues, and professional associates, as well as a group of his writings, and a selection of historical and reference material related to his life and death.

Series I holds letters to Montgomery's friends, fellow authors, his publishers, and various clergymen. Recipients include Samuel Taylor Coleridge, Barbara Hofland, and Hannah More, among many others. Multiple letters exist for several of his correspondents, including more than twenty sent to the author and editor (and medical doctor) John Aikin in London; these letters are the longest and most descriptive in the collection, with seven written on oversize sheets of paper. Other multiple letter sets are present for Robert Hartley Davenport (6), George Williams Fulcher (6), John Holland (5), Thomas Raffles (11), Robert Southey (4), and Miss Thompson (8). Most letters have the recipients' postal addresses as part of their document. Much of the content relates to Montgomery's writings and publications, in particular his poetry and work for hymnals, though some of the letters are personal in nature.

Series II holds a group of autograph manuscript poems and other writings by Montgomery, including two poems translated into Welsh. Series III holds clippings about Montgomery, portrait engravings, and material pertaining to his death and funeral proceedings, including a copy of The Death of James Montgomery, Esq. with a Sketch of his Life(1854).

Arrangement

Organized into three series: I. Letters from James Montgomery, 1789-1853. II. Writings of James Montgomery, 1821-1852. III. Other Papers, 1824-1920.
